Students may initiate interdisciplinary (IDIS) programs of concentration other than those formally approved by the faculty. Such majors require a minimum of twelve courses, ten of which must be from two disciplines with no fewer than four from either. For the two disciplines containing the ten courses, at least two of the courses in each discipline must be advanced courses. The remaining two courses needed to meet the twelve-course minimum must be chosen from a third discipline. Students must provide a written rationale for such programs, indicating how the chosen disciplines relate to each other and how the proposed course requirements constitute a coherent field of study. Such proposals require the approval of the registrar and the chairs of the departments from which the ten courses are selected. Departments will include provisions for meeting the writing requirements for the IDIS major. Please complete the following form. Be sure to obtain the needed signatures.
