I. Keeping records

From its beginning the Christian church has emphasized the importance of keeping written records of its views, decisions, and work. Likewise the Reformed tradition, of which the Christian Reformed Church in North America (CRC) is one stream, has devoted, and continues to devote, resources to keeping records. As early as the classical meeting of January 19-20, 1870 (Art. 6), church leaders specifically endorsed the keeping of physical records, a practice that had been in place since before the official founding of the denomination in 1857. The questions, concerns, complaints, discussions, and decisions that led to the founding of the denomination were carefully recorded and kept, as the minutes of Graafschap CRC still make clear. When the four founding congregations met as a classis in April 1857, they kept minutes, which were unfortunately lost. Later, some effort was extended to find those first minutes, or, at the very least, to recreate them as best as was possible. As the denomination made clear, the reason for keeping records was that these provided a more consistent reflection of actions than later human memory.

Over the past 150 years, the denomination has defined the office of archivist and the mandate of the archives via a series of synodical decisions. Initially the denomination had assigned the task of preserving the official records, or archives, to a series of people. Initially the presiding officer or clerk of the meeting was responsible to keep the minutes and bring them to the next meeting for approval. This resulted in the records being transferred among various people over time. To give some permanence to the storage place, after the Theological School in Grand Rapids was established in

1 The letters of the New Testament and later the archives and libraries kept by the Roman Catholic Church, the Eastern Orthodox Church, and the Coptic Orthodox Church give long running evidence to the importance of keeping records.

2 In past years April 8, 1857, the date on letters sent to the Classis of Holland, Reformed Church in America, has been used as a proxy for the beginning of the CRC denomination. The true date of beginning, however, would have been the first time the four met and organized as a classis. The exact date of that meeting is not known because the minutes were lost. But the intention to meet was announced on April 17, 1857, and a letter explaining to the churches in the Netherlands the reasons for the secession is dated April 24, 1857 (a copy obtained from the Netherlands by Janet Sheeres, biographer of Douwe J. Vander Werp, is in the denominational archives). This letter notes that Rev. Hendrik Klijn served as the presiding officer and Rev. Koenraad Vanden Bosch as the clerk of the meeting. As a result, the first meeting was held sometime during the week of April 18-24, 1857. Since classical meetings at the time tended to be held on Wednesdays, to allow for travel to and from the meeting places, it is likely that the first classical meeting of the Christian Reformed Church took place on April 22, 1857.

3 Classical meeting, October 12-13, 1864, Art. 11.

4 Classical meeting, August 10-11, 1870, Art. 9. Until 1865 classical meetings were the highest level of church governance in the CRC. That year a second classis was organized, requiring the formation of the General Assembly as the highest level of governance. In 1880 the name of the General Assembly was changed to Synod.

1876, its head, then Rev. Gerrit Boer, was designated the archivist.\textsuperscript{6} As the Theological School grew to eventually become Calvin Theological Seminary and Calvin College, sharing a common library, it was decided that the librarian serve as the archivist.\textsuperscript{7}

As the denomination grew, so did the work of the archivist. The denominational Historical Committee was established in 1934 to oversee the archives and support the work of the archivist.\textsuperscript{8} During the post World War II years with the rapid growth of the denomination due primarily to the growth of congregations in Canada, it was decided that the archives actively conduct field work to encourage the keeping of congregational records.\textsuperscript{9} During the late 1950s, as the holdings in the archives grew and space became a problem, for a time the records were moved to the new denominational building and the denominational stated clerk was appointed archivist.\textsuperscript{10} In 1962 the task was returned to the seminary and college library director. Synod 1971 appointed Dr. Herbert Brinks the denominational archivist in addition to teaching history at Calvin College.\textsuperscript{11} Dr. Brinks retired in 1995, and in late 1997 Dr. Richard Harms was appointed full-time archivist.\textsuperscript{12}

Although it was clear from the beginning that classical meeting minutes (later \textit{Acts of Synod}), reports made to those meetings, and correspondence produced by those meetings should be retained in an archive, in 1912 the first official effort was made to deposit the records of discontinued classes in the archives. That year synod commended Classis Grand Rapids East, created in 1898 when Classis Grand Rapids was divided into two, for placing the minutes of the previously undivided classis in the archives. That synod decided that the records for all discontinued ministries also should be stored in the archives.\textsuperscript{13} Almost four decades later all denominational agencies were encouraged to store their inactive permanent records in the archives, and the next year all denominational agencies reporting to synod were mandated to send such records to the archives when those records were ten years old, unless there were compelling reasons not to do so.\textsuperscript{14} A decade later the work of the archives again was expanded with the charge to also collect the records of local, active congregations and microfilm their minutes, returning the originals to the congregation, so that a back-up set of records was available to local congregations should anything happen to their original

By the end of the 1960s synod instructed all denominational agencies, not just those specifically reporting to synod, to send their inactive records to the archives. The method of submitting records expanded with new technologies available, and congregations were allowed to submit electronic copies of records rather than originals to the archives. In such cases, the archives makes the cautionary note to congregations that the confidentiality of records cannot be assured for electronic records submitted via email. Synod 2003 specifically approved the sending of all inactive membership records (records for those who died, transferred to another church, or otherwise were no longer active members) to the archives rather than being discarded.

To protect the privacy of individuals about whom information may be contained in certain records while also dealing with requests for conducting historical research, synod authorized that, without exception, only agency heads, or those authorized by agency heads in writing, be granted access to confidential records. Access to such records for discontinued ministries or agencies was vested with the denominational archivist. A subsequent decision permits the denominational archivist to grant access to such records, if those records are more than 100 years old, but confidentiality must be maintained by not allowing any personally identifiable information to be used. The methods of granting access to records less than 100 years old was modified in 2007 when facsimile or signed email could be used in addition to signed, original letters on agency letterhead.

The facility to store the official denominational archives likewise has changed as the mandate and holdings of the archives came to be defined. As noted, initially the presiding officers or clerks of meetings were charged with safeguarding records and bringing them to subsequent meetings. As the volume of records increased, this arrangement became unworkable, so the decision was made that the congregation hosting the synodical assembly hold the records until the next meeting. Although not specifically stated, the respective congregations were relieved of this records storage responsibility in 1881 when the head of the Theological School was appointed archivist with the implication that the records were to be kept at the Theological School. To ensure the longevity of archival records, Synod 1941 (Art. 68) mandated that all such records be keep in fireproof storage. When the library of the seminary and college was not able to establish such space, the archives were moved to the Christian Reformed Publishing House until the library had suitable space.\(^{24}\) When library space again became limited due to the rapidly increasing enrollment at the college during the 1950s, the archives were moved to the recently completed denominational building on 28th Street at Kalamazoo Avenue, then just outside the Grand Rapids city limits.\(^{25}\) A few years later when the seminary and college moved to the Knollcrest Campus, the archives were placed in a new facility on that campus, named Heritage Hall, which has space specifically designed for records storage.\(^{26}\)

Synod 2007 (Art. 32) instructed the Historical Committee to produce a records retention document for the local congregations, including in this document a description of the information that all congregations should retain and elements that should be included in minutes. In addition to the denominational mandates, church officers have a fiduciary responsibility for keeping records. Detailing these local, provincial, state, and federal laws and regulations is beyond the scope of this document, but every church officer must become familiar with these fiduciary responsibilities as well.

II. Record keeping systems

There are many organizational systems that have been developed, and each has advantages under specific circumstances. No one system, however, is best in every situation. Organization of subject material or correspondence alphabetically by topic or name is generally effective. Minutes, outgoing correspondence (a reader file), or financial records may best be kept in chronological systems, while giving records may best be kept in a numeric system. Given the diverse nature of congregational records, a typical records system uses all of these variations, depending on the record type, and may even contain a combination of systems within a single record type. For instance, voluminous correspondence files may be best kept in an alpha-chronological file, or some financial records may be best kept in an alpha-numeric file. Each congregation will have to determine which filing system best suits its needs for specific record types. Whatever system is used, it is best to keep the system as simple as possible to avoid misfiling and to allow others to readily learn it.

Records should be stored in a secure file or room, to protect the confidentiality of the contents, and access to records should be limited to a few, specified individuals. It is best to store records in an environment where temperature and humidity fluctuations are kept to a minimum—68-72°F and 40-50 percent relative humidity are best for paper records. To prevent mold and mildew growth, records should not be kept in an area where the atmosphere is stagnant or excessively humid. Records should also be protected from extended exposure to ultraviolet radiation, which speeds chemical reactions that cause fading. Such radiation comes from direct sunlight and direct fluorescent light, so reflecting such light off other surfaces or filtering such light is best. Incandescent light does not emit such radiation. To protect records from water damage, do not store them directly on floors or under plumbing pipes/lines.

\(^{26}\) Acts of Synod 1962, Art. 115.

Digital (computer) records have many advantages for space saving and data manipulation. But they are not yet suitable for the archival storage of information. The generally accepted standard for archival storage is that the records will be retained unchanged for 50 years. Given the everchanging software and hardware used with computer records, this 50-year threshold has not yet been achieved. Test data indicate that magnetic disks and tapes begin to deteriorate after 20 years, while CDs/DVDs remain physically reliable for 10 years. Silicon-based storage systems (USB/flash drives) show greater promise in meeting the 50-year retention requirement, but this has not yet been conclusively demonstrated. Even if the formats were to be viable for 50-year storage, there are still questions about readability from various media. For example, the hardware is no longer available to play many older computer tapes and cassettes, 8-inch diskettes, and 5.25-inch diskettes. The ability to retrieve data from low density or high density 3.5-inch diskettes is also rapidly fading, and, with USB/flash drives, even DVD/CD storage is beginning to fade from use. Finally, new generations of software often cannot fully read files created by other software or even previous versions of the same-brand software. Although files created in digital format are being archived, the cost for hardware, software, and back-up hardware is very expensive. As a result, the archival storage of records in the denomination is still being done on hard copy or in micro formats (film or fiche).

This is not to say that congregations should not be using computers, software, or digital records for their purposes. When using such equipment and media, however, be mindful of their limitations. File storage and naming protocols should be clearly stated so that all can follow those protocols uniformly. File names like eldersmtg11-07-08, minuteselders8Oct2008, eldersmtg090708, and eldersminutes2008-12-06 will be listed in widely separate locations in directory searches, once multiple years of records have been stored. Using one uniform file-naming system will make finding and retrieving old files much easier. When creating a new record, it is tempting to open a previous record, with its formatting protocols, but when doing so it is also easy to save new data under the old filename, resulting in old data being overwritten. Finally, when new hardware or software is obtained, clerks or staff must ensure that all data are transferred to the new hardware and media.

In the Reformed tradition the term “consistory” has been used to refer to a congregation's elected ruling body; in some cases it referred to ruling elders, in other cases it was used to refer to a body of both elders and deacons. To avoid this potential for confusion, this document will use “council” to refer to a congregation's ruling body composed of elders and deacons.
