July Library, Calvin College Franklin at Benjamin, SI Grand Rapids, Mich,

P.C. 7 Z ON

GALVIN COLLEGE and Senin

unio NIATY

Professor Van Til's Apologetics

Social Reponsibility The Calvinist and

The Minister's Reading Habits

Correspondence

Book Reviews

The CALVIN FORUM

Published by the Calvin Forum Board of Publication

NOVEMBER, 1953

VOLUME XIX, NO. IV.

Contenta

Artiales

₽9	bmsnoM nitrbM	A Letter from Grand Rapids
		orrespondence
		•
29	J. K. Van Baalen	The Minister's Reading Habits
83	rounord unoT	A Calvinistic Social Ethic
19		Lessor Van Til's Apologetics. Wart III: God and Hu

A Letter from Iron Springs, Alberta......John De Jong 65

Book Reviews

Il Hasper 71	An Inadequate Angelology
	A Devotional Work by Prof. A or rsqssH .Lnoi	tsiverddA ns lo noitsiverddA
or goold robanv anol	Valuable Studies on Divorce
69 musrunt suilonroD	Good Teaching
88 rettird sproed	Spiritual Riches
J. G. Vanden Bosch 68	Prescriptive not Descriptive
88 reitird seorge Gritter 68	2,585 Illustrations
78 numermmiT ndol	Two Worlds
	οοκ πενιε ws

THE CALVIN FORUM FDITORIAL COMMITTEE

CALVIN FORUM CORRESPONDENTS
•
Works) JOHN BRATT (Theological
Book EditorsJohn Timmerman
Тнергокр Dівкя
LAMBERT J. FLOKSTRA
10HN KEOWMING
Associate EditorsMARTIN J. WYNGAARDEN
Editor in ChiefCecil De Boer
EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

ARTHUR ALLEN GORTZEE Gouth Africa J. CHR. COETZEE Gouth Africa JAMES DANNE GORTZEE GOUTH Africa FAUL DE KOEKKOEK GOUTH F. W. DEN DULK GODDARD BUTCH GODDARD GOUTH GOUTH

The Calvin Forum is published by a board of the combined faculties of Calvin Seminary and Calvin College. Its purpose is to provide a means of intercommunication among all persons interested in the application of Calvinistic principles.

Address all editorial correspondence to Dr. Cecil De Boer, Editor The Calvin Forum, Calvin College and Seminary, Grand Rapids 6, Michigan, Address all subscription and circulation correspondence to: The Calvin College and Seminary, Grand Forum, Calvin College and Seminary, Grand Rapids 6, Michigan.

THE CALVIN FORUM is published monthly, except from June to September, when it appears bi-monthly. Subscription price: Two Dollars per year.

Donors or underwriters for subscriptions from Japan and similar "soft-currency" areas:
Bergsma Brothers Foundation
Grand Rapids, Michigan,

W. J. Dykatra, Grand Rapida, Michigan. William Muller, Grand Rapida, Michigan.

Entered as second-class matter October 3, 1935, at the Post Office at Grand Rapids, Michigan under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Professor Van Til's Apologetics

Jesse De Boer*
Deparment of Philosophy
University of Kentucky

Part III. God and Human Knowledge classes of men differ on the question of its foundation and application" (I.S. Theol. 38).

of contradiction, though Van Til uses this term as a passage must be about something else—not the law the law of contradiction; and the remainder of the formal principle. If he is correct, they all agree on And Van Til says that all men do agree on this use it means B and in another use it means non-B. eno ni tedt besu os si ti ni mret yns ti bilsyni si tnem a circle it is not also not a circle, and that any arguerties they possess; it says only that, e.g., if a thing is ing about what particular things exist or what propnon-B." This is a "formal principle." It says nothform something like this, "A cannot be both B and law of contradiction is usually stated in a symbolic the whole section quoted is "at loose ends." (2) The ment of what it is to which the word applies. Thus thinks it is. He supplies a word, but not a statewhat he thinks it is, differs from what someone else the law of contradiction. How then am I to tell how I comment as follows. (1) Van Til does not define name for this other topic, whatever it may be.

predication is possible without any reference to Van Til's statement that "anti-theism holds that none is needed besides. (4) Now, what is meant by o'clock here now, that is the reference point, and 00:01 si ji ll (neam yam asanda zidi revetenw) or man, the "final reference point in predication" the truth of this statement, I am not making myself, eye to a later passage of Van Til's, that as I verify tucky," is to fabricate a fantasy. I add here, with an Standard Time, on June 4, 1953, in Lexington, Kenstatement as, "It is now 10:00 o'clock P.M., Eastern God's knowledge before I know the truth of such a made by God. To suppose that I have to check with check my statement with a like statement being make a statement and verify its truth unless I first not make statements. No, if it means that I cannot unless God created me I would not exist and could God?" Yes, if this form of words means only that that "all predication presuppose the existence of fined as a theist defines it. But does a theist hold they seem to mean, and if (b) the term "God" is detsdw nsəm "tziədt-itns" bns "tziədt" zmrət ədt (s) ti tence. Of course, they must disagree on that topic pose, that they differ on the question of God's exisof the law of contradiction. This must mean, I supfroitsagree on the "foundation and application" -itns bas steistd teat that theists and anti-

on which comment is necessary, but the streeperated in the comment is not useful until these passages are presented in full. I regret that so much space will be given over to quotation, but these passages have a special importance and are unusually difficult to understand. All of them have to do with difficult to understand. All of them have to do with and non-Christian logic.

1

do agree upon it as a formal principle; but the two tion as something that all men agree upon. All men ont of the question to speak of the law of contradicitself is between theists and non-theists, it is quite on the question as to what the law of contradiction such a fundamentally exclusive difference of opinion determined by the plan of God. . . . If then there is initely limits the field of the possible to that which is conception of an absolutely self-conscious God deftradiction as standing above that revelation. man to test the revelation of God by the law of contradiction, inasmuch as such a belief does not permit self-conscious God is the rejection of the law of concontradiction. For him the belief in an absolute, hesitate to say that the theist has denied the law of hand, the anti-theist, from his standpoint, will not its foundation in the nature of God. On the other the law of contradiction, to operate at all, must have denied the very law of contradiction, inasmuch as very well be reversed. The anti-theist has, in effect, ground of bare possibility. Hence is and is not may the anti-theist, these terms play against the backterms is and is not quite different connotations. For out any reference to God. This at once gives to the anti-theism holds that predication is possible withexistence of God as a self-conscious being, while "Theism holds that all predication presupposes the of predication theism and anti-theism differ totally. statements, and adds that with respect to the basis of human predication, i.e. of man's ability to make his predecessor. He says that it raises the question Van Til takes this as an occasion to "improve" upon has the right to refuse belief to the contradictory. the test of being free from self-contradiction; man titled to insist that revelation must be able to pass Hodge says somewhere that human reason is en-

MOTE: This is Prof. Jesse De Boer's third and final article on the new Apologetics.

to go do do do how word how tolking about the above analysis are based. now quote several of Van Til's statements on which because I share in being and in reason with God. I God and man and that I am ultimate or autonomous rational laws and principles of being are common to laws of logic or reason, I am reduced to saying that foundation of the being of all creatures and of the Unless, that is, I start from the sovereign God as the predication" (this phrase occurs in I. S. Theol. 172). mi trioq əərətətər lanıt ədt" əbam zi ram tadt zrasəm any field" (Challenge 40). The alternative also be shown to be utterly destructive of predication in should challenge the wisdom of this world. It must for making statements, for predication. " alternative means ultimately that there is no basis doctrine about what makes a statement true. The being and of logic" (Challenge 14). shares with God "in the same abstract generality of the ultimacy of the human mind, that man's mind Van III goes on to say that Komanism tacitly affirms tion of the facts of the universe" (Challenge 13); anan deals when he engages in the logical manipulationality rather than the nature of God with which the logic that dwells in being. It is abstract raare in their freedom confronted with a necessity of use of the concept 'being in general', "God and man cause of its affirmation of human freedom and its himself" (Challenge 10). In Romanist thought, beto shifting man's allegiance away from God to man ciple of being and logic. And this in turn amounts final allegiance away from God to an abstract prina standard that is above Him. It is to shift man's the self-sufficiency of God. It is to subject God to speak about 'being in general' is, in effect, to deny as much as one word about being in general, 'to (Challenge 9). "The true Protestant refuses to say philosophy with the idea of 'being' in general' "The Roman Catholic starts his parentheses). (that is, with himself)" (Challenge 8, Van Til's that is, with himself), he ends his system with man Aristotle does not begin with God but with man thought either with himself or with God. And since Man, he says, 'must begin and end his system of K . (si divit tenw to gaixeags at agengast istleabi səsu nətto liT asV taht rədməmər ot lutqləh əd object the statement is about. (At this point it may that it consists in correspondence with whatever correspondence theory is to be used, would state edge. But then a better definition of truth, if the case in this instance, viz. God's nature and knowl because, or in the sense that, they assert what is the nature and knowledge, my statements will be true course, if I am making true statements about God's ence with the nature and knowledge of God. Of single good reason for defining truth as correspondolic theology. (2) Van Til has never provided a I pass over Van Til's statements about Roman Cathfound in the paragraph above. (1) For the present t select for comment only a few of the notions > existence. I fear that I can't guess the answer. tion, that the theist and anti-theist differ on God's is Van Til saying, besides the point, true by definithe anti-theist really says, "God does exist." What sentence may be replaced by its contradictory. So the theist. Van Til suggests that the copula in this define Him, does not exist," says the anti-theist to the anti-theist on God's existence. 'God, as you thereby produce agreement between the theist and lents in sentences uttered by the anti-theist, and gests, by reversing "is" and "is not" or their equiva--gus IiT naV yaw əht ni əmag a yalq tnioq ziht ta and "is not" mean the same for both of them. I could theist could not differ on God's existence unless" not" different connotations. The theist and anti-God's existence. This does not give "is" and "is God?" Perhaps only that the anti-theist denies > tion of times same in both uses)? that a circle is not a circle (assuming that the definideny the law of contradiction in the sense of saying Incidentally, how could one communicate if he did that the anti-theist denies the law of contradiction. ed such testing), is to say nothing like the statement there have been several "revelations" which needconsistency a revelation which claims to be divine tradiction because he insists on the right to test for And to say that the anti-theist denies the law of conment by qualifying it with the phrase "in effect." course, he takes away most of the force of his statenot a circle? Is Van Til merely raising dust? Of God's existence. Does he say that a circle is also denies the law of contradiction because he denies taiendi-itne ent tant yea of gaibaelsim at it (c)

> (6) There is no use for the statement that the antitheist, by denying God's existence, sets the law of contradiction against the background of bare possibility. Does Van Til mean to say that it I denied that I could square a circle? Of course, he does not specify what the anti-theist is committed to. And to say that the theist is able to limit the possible by reference to God's plan is not to help the theist predict tomorrow's weather or the discovery of new drugs for treating cancer. Here again Van Til uses drugs for treating cancer. Here again Van Til uses words not to inform but to frighten.

Ħ

At this point I bring forward a set of Van Til's ideas which belong together, though I have already called attention to one of them. In the preceding paper I quoted a passage from I. S. Theol. 39 which contains the following sentence: "If we are to have respondence of our experience, there must be a correspondence of our experience to the eternally concernt experience of God." This sentence means to say that no statement of mine is true unless it corresponds with a statement made by God. Now, there are several passages in which Van Til states in view of the character of the alternative to this his view of the character of the alternative to this

He himself is not the reference point, whatever this may mean. There is no sense in saying that a non-Christian has to translate the sentence "The grass is wet," into the sentence "I think the grass is wet," on a non-Christian basis" (I. S. Theol. 171). fatalistic view of reality. There can be nothing new of God, one is to that extent bound to a static or upon the self-conscious, everlasting self-affirmation at all man deals with facts or laws that are not based tian forms of thought. If one allows that anywhere "There is false staticism involved in all non-Chris-(L. S. Theol. 39). At another place Van Til says, they work according to the law of contradiction" facts lose their novelty for man when he sees that then new facts lose their novelty. 'In that case says this law is an abstraction independent of God, the reverse about the law of contradiction, i.e. if he do justice to their novelty. If, however, a man says man who says so can meet new facts and, so to speak, upon God's nature and knowledge, Van Til says, the of novelty. If the law of contradiction is said to rest tion, cannot account for or deal with the occurrence leges, he has a false notion of the law of contradicshow that the non-Christian, because, as Van Til al-There is a set of passages in which Van Til tries to from true staticism?), I judge that no one has use staticism (just what is this, and how does it differ ment that the non-Christian is committed to false nothing new has come to be. As for Van Til's stateappealing to the law of contradiction, to talk as if horse becomes a cow, it would be silly of me, by pret (or exemplify) the law of contradiction. If a a cow; that, perhaps, is a way in which I can interthe difficulty. When a horse is a horse, it is not also but the law of contradiction is not what produces that the cow I see today is the horse I saw yesterday, to the next. It might be hard for me to acknowledge serving to coach one on what to expect from one day of contradiction simply is not a predictive formula difficulty with novelty than Van Til has, and the law of contradiction. The non-Christian has no more wal and bns natizird-non and the disting and the law of contradiction. More basically, Van Til is simply tacts when he notices that they conform to the law to ytlevon edt egbelwonack ot aliat naitairdo-non near the end of the preceding paragraph, that the sentence hardly agrees with the statement, quoted "Science" under non-Christian thought, so that this of this sentence makes clear that Van Til classifies science is not a conscious agent.) Also, the context thinks!" (Incidentally, this is very bad grammar: one has only Van Til's word for what ""Science" The difficulty with this last sentence is that solutely novel proceeds constantly" (C. T. Evid. it deals with a stream of time out of which the abfrom Van Til where he says, "'Science" thinks that As I read this I remember an earlier quotation

III

> Van Til's entire account of what makes a statement folk mean by Platonism. It is necessary to deny Van Til is merely offering a new twist to what some copy or duplicate of another true statement, then these with others? If every true statement is a be true? With other statements of His own? And what must God's statements agree with in order to true by agreement with a higher level statement, with God's knowledge, if, that is, a statement is made of my statements is made true by correspondence justified by his way of talking about truth. If one (3) Let me put a question to Van Til which is properties and that man is equipped to notice them. of creation, viz. that God's creatures have definite Til seems to be forgetting one aspect of the doctrine statement alongside a statement made by God/ Yan cedures for measuring distance; one does not lay the statement one checks the distance, by standard proself justifies the statement, and to verify or test the God's knowledge of the distance.\ This distance it htiw econdence by correspondence with Lex-I mort should be distance of Louisville from Lex-justifies a policy of avoiding contradictory statea statement is about, whether God or distances, that my italics). It is the character of whatever object cordance with it, to fashion the world" $(Apol.\ 10,$ principle of Truth above himself in order, in acnot, Because he could not, look up to an abstract subjecting God to logical law. He writes, "God did term. Incidentally, Van Til himself appears to be things; he is Platonizing in the worst sense of the bearing in mind that they are general characters of paper. Van Til seems to be reifying laws instead of particulars which I have analyzed in the preceding is his view of the difficulty about universals and ulterior purpose. Similar to the present fabrication product of a habit of fabricating difficulties for an ciple as an abstraction standing above God, is a tion from both God and man, and of rational prin-Christian (and Romanist) assumption, an abstrac-(4) His talk of logical law being, on the non-true if one is to avoid absurdity.

object and test its truth by appealing to the object. Christian cannot conform a statement to a natural ever assumption he is employing, I deny that the nonconform to other statements made by men. Whatconform to God's statements he has to make them another and (b) unless man makes his statements talks as if (a) no statement is true unless it copies with idealist and pragmatic assumptions when he distance as it is. I suspect that Van Til is operating necessity in virtue of which they cannot measure a sist"-as may well be the case), but there is no logy, unless "deny" can mean "know about but retians deny the Christian God (this is a mere tautoawes the reader more than it informs. Mon-Chris-This phrase is impressive; there is no doubt that it man is 'the final reference point in predication." (5) Finally, I deny that non-Christians hold that ments about the object.

neulty. further piece of information to exacerbate my difwould still be puzzled. In fact, I would now have a has solved it? That doesn't alter my condition. I zle here, what good does it do me to learn that God formation to my old information. If there is a puz--ri wen ym efalst of ma l won l smess "Reformed" solution) does not succeed. The puzzle from conceding that this is, or that there is at all, a formed "solution" proposed by Van Til (I am far appeal to Reformed belief. And finally, the Restructs just those puzzles that give him occasion to One becomes suspicious when an apologist con-Reformed faith can rescue him out of such puzzles. tainly a philosopher is out of his depth if only the before? Van Til's puzzle is a fabrication. And certion, before he can learn what he did not know a day learned information as duplicates of God's informa-God, and himself as God's creature, and his own formation to God? Does the child need to know or his own name unless he relates these bits of in-That the infant cannot learn about the light switch what is he denying—or saying, for that matter? wall. But if this is not what Van Til is denying, light goes on and off when I push the switch on the that my child can learn (or has learned) that the it would be impolite to charge him with denying when Van Til brings the puzzle forward, I suppose themselves to arbitrary assumptions. Of course, zle made up by people who have first committed know is not insoluble; in fact, it is an artificial puzabout how a man can learn what he does not already duplicates of human statements. (7) The puzzle appeal to idealistic logic in order to provide divine and operations; it is equally certain that he did not God exists as the creative cause of all finite existence I can look at it?) (6) Calvin certainly said that Til please point to an "a priori resting point" so that logic and metaphysics. (Incidentally, would Van of statements is exactly of a piece with idealistic not free. Van Til's demand for an eternal system necessarily true the action itself was necessary and true statement about a past freely chosen action is blunder of Hegel, that of supposing that because a is to make a true statement, to be making the old about man's needing an' noing v' ne gaibean s'arm tuode ment. Van Til appears, in making up the puzzle statement about the state of a cow at a given momean that I cannot at a given moment make a true The fact that cows change and that I change does not ings, and I refrain from further comment on it. (5) timeless logic" is another case of idealist borrow-Til attributes to them. The talk about "a system of denied the thesis which, it may be presumed, Van everything is known. Plato and Aristotle both known exhaustively or that nothing is known until zi ti azəlnu nwond zi gnidton tadt bətata zi ti anait in every theory of knowledge offered by non-Chrisbut resists Him"). (4) It is simply false to say that "non-Christian" may mean "man who knows God for it. Perhaps Van Til is again appealing to Bradley's fallacious argument against change; plenty of non-Christians have seen through that.

bottomless flux. of man we are doomed to be lost in an endless and back of the self-conscious act of the knowing mind not with Calvin presuppose the self-contained God of experience within, is doomed to failure. If we do either in the world of fact about him or in the world to find one spot that he can exhaustively understand He himself is on the move. . . Every effort of man ever to find within himself an a priori resting point? his experience are subject to change. How is he of timeless logic. But man himself and the facts of tively. It must be reducible to a part of a system to be understood a fact must be understood exhaustian forms of epistemology there is first the idea that not move forward. That is to say, in all non-Chrisunder way, and it it could get under way it could erence point in predication, knowledge cannot get genuine significance. If man is made the final reftion that the processes of learning and history have and the inexhaustible character of the idea of revelareservence it is only by stressing the comprehensiveness Van Til, however, has more to say on this topic.

lated to what man already knows in true coherence" known and not new to God. Therefore they are rethe new facts that he learns about are already he really is. He also can add to his knowledge since upon the scene. He has knowledge of self for what learning because he knows God when he appears eternal self-affirmation man can get on the way to men from scepticism. By presupposing the God of comprehensibility of God is in the interest of saving the basis of the Reformed Faith. To affirm the incannot ask questions remains unsolved except on ask no questions or he knows nothing and therefore that either man must know everything and he need new it would be unknown. Thus the old dilemma known it would be no longer new. As long as it was knows. There would be nothing new. If it was basis he could add nothing new to what he already way to learning by experience on a non-Christian "But granted that man could get started on the lects known by man (though this does not hold it they must, by definition, disagree on the list of obis and on methods for obtaining knowledge, though tians have agreed often enough on what knowledge form of epistemology? Christians and non-Chris-How does one go about recognizing a non-Christian he often displays the opposed interest also. to defend the truth of Reformed Christianity; though is more anxious to establish human knowledge than Reformed faith? Sometimes Van Til writes as if he trom scepticism?" Is this a reason for accepting the (2) Why is Van Til so exercised about "saving men meant by "true coherence?" Van Til does not say. fallacies than I have time to notice. si tsdW (1) This piece of dialectic contains more errors and all things, flowers no less than God" (I. S. Theol. 27). of his own principle, the natural man misinterprets truly" (I.S. Theol. 26). "So far as he works in terms point of view the "natural man" knows nothing and the laws of gravitation. From this ultimate as basically mistaken in his notions about the atoms taken in his notions about religion and God, but is that the "natural man" is not only basically mistruly as he ought to know it. It means, therefore, gridton ewond (nam latural man) knows nothing terms to it.) He goes on to say about this fact, "This fact; I call attention to Van Til's applying ethical Some people give the name "antithesis" to this or covenant breaker, and on what the fact implies. be phrased by describing the natural man as a rebel be careful not to relax his hold on a fact which may stand the problem, says Van Til, the Christian must been as difficult as Van Til has made it. To underpoint" (I. S. Theol. 26). Well, it has not always again and do better. non-Christians, and there is no remedy but to try just as liable to make blunders in science as are not indicate that he has not science. Christians are times before, the non-Christian's error here does course, this isn't news; besides, as I have said several about God and His relation to the world. Now, of knowledge and science, he has not Christian beliefs know it" is to say only that, while he has ordinary that the natural man "knows nothing as he ought to created status of atoms, flowers, etc. To say then only that the natural man fails to recognize the avoids the task of being specific, or else he is saying and flowers. In what respect? Either Van Til He has knowledge, but he is mistaken about atoms true! It is true as far as it goes. How far is that? edge; no mistake about that, this knowledge is even forthcoming. Again, the natural man has knowlbreaker? A bit of analysis is required here but not man of such ethical terms as rebel or covenant the bearing on man's knowledge of the application to A good deal of this is a play on words. What is

(I. S. Theol. 171-172).

Paul stresses in the first two chapters of Romans. cannot escape knowing God. It is this point that escapably has he done this, that, try as he may, man presence on man's attention. So definitely and innature and man's own consciousness impresses his knowledge of God, in the sense that God through nonsense. "The natural man has knowledge, true tian doctrine is not opaque in its rudiments, it is not tion" (Apol. 44). This is obviously the case: Christherefore formally understand the Christian posiof fallen man may, as such, be keen enough. It can like this in his Epistle to the Romans. "The intellect some of them). After all, St. Paul said something the things that the Christian knows, but at least same things about God as does the Christian (not all mind" (Apol. 58), non-Christian knows exactly the zid ni nwob qeeb" ,esnes bnuotorq emos ni tsdt tian "knows nothing truly," Van Til goes on to say Yet, after saying that "basically" the non-Chris-

My discussion of Van Til's views of the knowledge of the natural man will be brief. I have already remarked on several of his views which bear on this topic.

I quote first a short passage which requires little comment. Van Til says, "Non-Christians think of reality as one whole, inclusive of God and man, and consequently they think of Reason as everywhere virtually the same, whether in God or in man. Human reason is said or assumed to be potentially divine" (I. S. Theol. 21). This might be useful if it were more accurate to fact and clear in its intent. I suppose that Mohammedans are non-Christians; but it is wrong to describe them as Van Til describes it is wrong to describe them as Van Til describes non-Christians. But suppose the term "non-Christians, but suppose the term "non-Christians, is limited to anti-theists. Since they deny God's existence, they would hardly bother to say that human reason is divine or that reason is the

them a form of words which they themselves would same in God and man. Then Van Til is applying to have no use for.

empirical knowledge. disabled from doing science or acquiring ordinary Christian is not, in virtue of being non-Christian, takes Winesaps to ripen. I contend that the nonknow God's relation to apples to learn how long it tending to creatureliness. One does not have to man can notice them without at the same time at-Jects—after all, things have these properties and the ordinary properties of sensible or natural obthat a non-Christian can make true statements about Till As to Van Til's last remark, I have contended and E. L. Mascall are doing so today, but not Van morked heroically on this problem; Austin Farrer cate that they are creatures. Augustine and Thomas point out those characters of creatures which indiwhat this theory means. To refute it one has to is unintelligent or unintelligible? I can think of existent, what is gained by speaking as if this view While it is false to say that the finite world is selfdo not know whether God exists" (I. S. Theol. 23). our senses can be known truly, if at all, even if we non-Christian takes for granted that the world of existent and as having its meaning in itself. The intelligently think of this universe as being self-"The non-Christian takes for granted that we can

Of course, the anti-theist is wrong about God, and this is of capital importance. But, supposing that one has in mind a man who denies the God of theistic belief, what is the good of saying that he places the being and knowledge of God on a level with man's being and knowledge, that he correlates man and being and knowledge, that he correlates man with God (Apol. 9)? How can he correlate man with something that, in his view, does not exist? I complain once more of Van Til's vague language.

What does the natural man know? 'We are well aware of the fact that non-Christians have a great deal of knowledge about this world which is true as far as it goes.... This has always been a difficult ments. (2) If Van Til means to say, in what he finally says about what the natural man knows, that the natural man knows science because in some profound sense he knows God, he is again mistaken. Just as natural science does not depend for its truth upon the scientist's holding correct opinions about of God and Scripture, so the natural man's knowledge of God is not what enables him to do science successfully. Whether Van Til does mean this I cannot say. Still, I am entirely convinced that there is not say. Still, I am entirely convinced that there is an enormous mistake at the center of his apologetics.

Λ

paper and with a general observation at the end. which would have been discussed fully in the fourth these papers with a few remarks indicating topics by bad scholarship). Thus I am content to conclude shore up the Reformed faith, or any belief whatever, sents, and to remind them that it is dangerous to ments with the actual writings which he misreprepress on them their responsibility to check his state. taking him as an authority on other thinkers, to imtheoretical (viz. to warn readers of Van Til against ected paper was more practical or pedagogical than for a long essay. But the chief purpose of the projof these people, and of others too, provide matter Van Til fails to state correctly and fairly the views sor Etienne Gilson. My notes on passages in which and the able contemporary French scholar, Profescluding Aristotle, Thomas Aquinas, John Calvin, views of important writers of various periods, indiscussed Van Til's inaccuracies in restating the Professor Van Til. The projected paper would have presented and examined some fundamental views of not to do so. I think that my three papers have the patience of readers of the Forum, I have decided views of the extent to which I have already taxed I had intended to write one more paper, but in ordinary univocal or generic concept. He insisted, Aristotle simply did not conceive of "being" as an is placed in contrast with a distortion of Aristotle.) i.e. I hinder my own understanding of my faith, if it vinced that my conception of Christianity suffers, from Aristotle's metaphysics. I am equally con-Christian theology and philosophy have to depart (I am as convinced as Van Til is that ·səəuənbəs the doctrine of creation, and this has serious con-8-21). Aristotle, of course, did not "know" or use tures (e.g. Apol. 8, I. S. Theol. 211-214, Challenge as a principle which is shared between God and creathing called "being in general" or "abstract being" Aristotle (and Roman Catholics) of positing someof the concept of being. Time and again he accuses, does not show that he understands Aristotle's use of Aristotle. Further, I am convinced that Van Til Til then defines the Christian God in the very words Aristotle's God as an "It" and as no God at all, Van It is indeed odd to notice that, after speaking of mind the reader of a point made in the first paper. As for Van Til's treatment of Aristotle, let me re-> as to nature and as to God Himself. spect of their capacity to know what is the case, both ing, between Christians and non-Christians in rerespect to certain essentials, on Van Til's own showthesis) in ethical terms, there is no difference with the opposition of "natural man" to God (the antipretation seems to agree with Van Til's describing "knowing and loving." If I am right, and my inter-"knowledge" and that "true knowledge" means edge" of God, I suppose that "mere cognition" means Hodge calls "mere cognition" but not "true knowl-Til says (Apol. 44) that unbelievers have what inescapable sense of deity" (Apol. 56). When Van creatureliness. . . Calvin speaks of this as man's be conscious of itself without being conscious of its tion. It is itself revelational. It cannot naturally revelation. It is surrounded by nothing but revelasays that "it is naturally in contract with God's this. Speaking of the mind of man as such, Van Til mark of creatureliness, and no man can fail to notice lenge 5). In other words, all creatures bear the against God their Creator and their Judge" (Chalthat they are creatures of God and have sinned claim that all men know deep down in their hearts tion to him" (I. S. Theol. 27). "Paul makes bold to world as God's revelation. This is objective revelahim. He knows God and he knows himself and the Man has the sense of deity indelibly engraved upon it and to reflect on it. what he says and invite the reader to look closely at means of guessing what Van Til intends. I present ments? I confess to being baffled, and I have no is equipped to do science and to make true statethe natural man does know God and creation he also "know?" Does he intend in the end to say that since game with the help of an equivocal use of the term passages of the former type? Is Van Til playing a of God. What was the point or purpose of all the bound to notice that every finite object is a creature told that every man is made in God's image and is cusses directly the natural man's knowledge, I am as I turn to the few passages in which Van Til distruly," that he has no basis for predication. As soon grifton sword" asitsital non-chiefian "knows nothing in which Van Til argues at length and in a variety man knows. I have presented passage after passage Til's turnabout on this question of what the natural The reader ought to be as shocked as I am by Van

To conclud this section I offer two brief remarks. (1) It is true, of course, that the natural man resists God, rebels against Him, refuses to glorify Him as single part of Van Til's overly ambitious project of undermining the non-Christian's knowledge by arguing that the non-Christian has no basis for predication. There is no validity in any of those arguments of Van Til which are intended to show that the Bible and Christianity must be presupposed if science and ordinary knowledge are to be true, and science and ordinary knowledge are to be true, and that the non-Christian is unable to make true state-reflections of Augustine and Aquinas on the contingency of the entire being of finite things. Van Til comments in the following way: You see, reason cannot deal with existence but only with essences, and Gilson himself says so. Well, this is marvelous! Wan Til quotes Gilson and immediately distorts what Gilson says, equating Gilson's did not with canwot. If reason cannot do something, then obviously neither Augustine, nor Thomas, nor Van Til can do it. Yet they do it! What happens here is a trifle worse than a verbal slip.

idealists whose works he read in his student days. timized by the categories and techniques of the cient, medieval, and modern, is twisted and vicand complete mastery of great Christian texts, angetics, because it does not grow out of painstaking absolute idealism. I suggest that Van Til's apolowith the logical and metaphysical legerdemain of with fallacious reasoning, but, what is still worse, all, the purist version is impure, tainted not only ti qso ot bad. .beqoleved developed. And to cap it alleged that now for the first time a purely Rescholar is in peril of presumption if it is hinted and The Reformed when great texts are distorted. Scholarship suffers young theological students. have witnessed the existence of that effect in certain lectual habits of those who read them. Indeed, I that his writings are capable of damaging the intelinterpretations of the thought of other men, but also ing ambiguities, with bald fallacies, and with mis only that Van Til's apologetics is riddled with glar men he so unjustly attacks! I am convinced, not and arguments of Van Til and of the views of the offense make a thorough analysis of the statements end of the foregoing paragraph. Let him who takes have directed sharp words at the person, as at the addressed to a person. On occasion, however, I as beer ed ton bluods and stremugra are seebi ta Usually this asperity of expression has been directed criticisms of Van Til have been sharply worded. I confess that my Now my final observation.

Jesse De Boer University of Kentucky

and more than once, that being is not a genus. He did not talk of being as if it were the most general and abstract property which may be predicated of everything in the universe. In fact, it was Aristotle who first explained the analogous character of basic metaphysical concepts, and early Christian theologians profited from his work. It is unfair and incorrect to characterize his concept by using the term correct to characterize his concept by using the term theorems in general." The same critique holds of Van Til's comments on Thomas' use of 'being.'

•xangra• freedom as implying a limitation of God's soversuffices to show that he wrongly interprets human Westminster Confession (Article II of Chapter V) tor Romanism, that Van Til is wrong. In fact, the listed above; they will show, if Thomas may speak tirely wrong. I refer again to the passage in Thomas (I. S. Theol. 165, Challenge 13, 16). Again he is enhuman freedom amounts to independence from God dom or autonomy or ultimacy of man; he adds that sovereignty because of its desire to assert the freecuses Romanism of refusing to acknowledge God's of God and His absolute sovereignty. Van Til acelaborating the fundamental Christian conceptions they will also find that he is perfectly capable of using language with model clarity and simplicity; destination). I predict that they will find Thomas and Questions 22 and 23 (on providence and prelogica, Part I, Questions 44 and 45 (on creation), to read a few sentences from Thomas' Summa Theo-Romanism as reliable summaries, to take the trouble Van Til, and also folk who have taken his dicta on check his dictum with the Summa Theologica. I beg lenge 11, 13, 19). He is wrong if I am permitted to seriously the doctrine of creation (see also Chalstates (1. S. Theol. 165) that Romanism does not take Furthermore, Van Til is entirely wrong when he

And finally, I confess to being baffled by the way in which Van Til, after quoting some lines from Gilson, misstates what Gilson says (I. S. Theol. 221-224). Gilson writes that reason, as employed by Aristotle, did not make the distinction between essence and existence which become central in the

A Calvinistic Social Ethic

Tony Brouwer Department of Economics University of Michigan

tion that the Christian has one obligation toward his fellow man, the unbeliever, and another duty toward his fellow man, the Christian; and there is an alternative contention that he has but one obligation toward all men. Certainly these interpretations vary considerably and there is an urgent necessity for clarification lest there arise a justifiable suspicion concerning the validity—and the significance of the well-worn phrase, the Calvinistic "world and life view."

gain little by agreement. little by disagreement and from those who stand to will be elicited both from those who stand to lose and perhaps collectively. It is hoped that comment to face the practical issues of the day, individually Christian to his fellow man, and thus in helping us organizing our ideas about the responsibility of the Calvinistic interpretation would be very helpful in a discussion of the social ethic contained in the together original. Nevertheless, it seems to me that broad subject, nor profess that these ideas are al-Meedless to say, I do not pretend to exhaust this point—and on the implications of this relationship. of man's relation to man from the Christian standwuold like to submit a few thoughts on the subject With a view to stimulating this interest, I tion has received more attention recently than in the It is encouraging, however, that this pressing quesand mutual responsibilities. members who have common origins, similar natures, poses, but it is a whole, made up of interdependent units added together for selfish, protectionist puris not merely the sum or aggregate of independent concerned with the ends of the other members. It -nu accomplish his own independent ends, unarate and distinct units, each entitled to a private lated members. It is not merely a collection of sepganism consisting of functionally and integrally rethis theory, society, like the human body, is an orthe various parts of the human body. According to posed of members related to each other much as are of society, a theory which described society as comthinkers, and others, a functional or unitary theory There prevailed at one time among Christian

This unitary concept of society, though at one time it was speciously used to condone inequality between social classes and provided a basis for a repressive social policy, embodies, it seems to me, an essentially proper Christian view of man. The Calvinist position coincides closely with this concept for vinist position coincides closely with this concept for lem of preserving the received doctrine will undoubtedly be considerably more difficult.

Not only will the task of protecting the rich religious heritage be intensified, however. A related problem will be encountered as the traditional principles, the precepts regarding one's attitudes toward the world in which he lives, are subjected to review in the new setting. An integral part of the system of thought to be preserved was the idea of a comprehensive view of life, the idea that the Calvinistic doctrines contained an ethical imperative and a moral guide for the Christian in every avenue of activity. During the present period of adjustment, in which the members of the Reformed community in which the members of the Reformed community have been breaking out of the cocoons of separation, have been breaking out of the cocoons of separation, society. In the current period, however, the prob-

Reformed community and the larger "American"

the lack of reciprocal influence between the small historic Christian faith was simplified, perhaps, by ing the years of isolation the task of preserving the tion of that system of religious and moral ideas. Dur-life, it regarded as one of its chief tasks the preserva-

Ι

this idea, too, will surely undergo considerable test-

One of the sapects of this comprehensive ethic has already become the subject of concern and controversy; namely, the question of the moves, the relation of the Christian to the person with whom he comes into contact in his work, in his social activities, in writings in our Church papers of a lively interest in the prehensive Calvinistic ethic seems to provide the prehensive Calvinistic ethic sasociate as society in the contemporation. There is a contemporary, and there is a view that he must not dissociate man; and there is a view that he must not dissociate man; and there is a view that he must not dissociate minimality in the contemporary. There is a contemporate in the minimality of the contemporary.

the orphan, he would be obeying and honoring God. nim a cup of cold water or by providing a home for fellow men; it one cared for his neighbor by offering zin gnivol ye miH əzisiq bluow ən bob bəvol əno tl obedience to the will of the Creator in this respect.

than by their fruits? responsibility—for how else shall men be known affairs of men, but to act in accordance with that sibility not only to be interested intellectually in the -noqeer elacas open men the inascapable responthis command of God than it did. The second table Christian society exhibited a stronger respect for mentary on the Christian community if the nonthe household of faith. It would be an accusing comand convenience involved in befriending those of duty toward all men—because of the greater comfort zidt—bnammoo laravinu zidt bətəəlgən ti ti ytinum It would be a sad commentary on the Christian comtian who, by God's grace, is able in spirit to obey it. it does to the unbeliever; indeed, it is only the Chris-Calvinist, applies to the Christian as forcefully as been repudiated. This demand, according to the ferences can only be misleading, for the law has not Christian love toward the "brother," but such inment was replaced by the New Testament stress on -bnsmmoo sidt tadt berred infermand-

a part of the group. As such the individual member ceives of him as being a member of the community, term individual can have meaning is that which conconcept of society. The only sense in which the as an isolated unit, is incompatible with a Calvinistic creational purpose. The concept of an individual his social commitments, is not true to his nature and ing in his own interest, and failing to acknowledge duman being, out of touch with his fellow men, actstrictly speaking is not a girder, or a word, so a and without context, is not serving its purpose and girder, lying unused in a junk yard, or a word, alone lives in violation of his nature. Just as a building knowledge the reciprocal duities of its members, imply a community of persons and failing to achis own selfish ends, refusing to think in terms that collectively, cooperatively. Any person living for tulfiling their purposes only as they work together, responsible group, performing their tasks in life and a street. They are rather a related and mutually ly contiguous, like trees in a forest or like houses on uals, separately co-existing, or merely geographicaldo. Men cannot be described as a group of individportance, and with whom one will have nothing to enti or gaivsa as beszimzib vo beteelgen vo nettog view, are not thought of as people who can be forpersonal concern. One's neighbors, according to this their problems and misfortunes as matters of deep obligation of men to regard their fellow men and tary view of society, a view that emphasizes the Eiblical and Calvinistic doctrines to accept an uni-It would seem clearly proper in the light of these > generation of them that hated Him. visited upon his children, unto the third and fourth Old Testament warning that his iniquities would be Man's unitary relationship is indicated also in the God rose in their midst, as the human race did. not fall as an entire group when rebellion against sible for their moral behavior. The angel world did dividuals, standing before God as separately respon-Angels were created as separate and distinct inwith the manner in which the angels are related. The unity of man is contrasted in Reformed doctrine cision by Adam placed all men at enmity with God. a spiritual and moral sense as well. A spiritual derectly from him not only in a physical sense, but in of the human race," and that all men descend difrms that Adam was the "physical and federal head through one Mediator, Jesus." The Calvinist afof original sin, and of the possibility of redemption tural teaching of our responsibility in Adam's fall, race is the foundation on which is built the scripessential for us to maintain this. The unity of the "Scripture teaches that our race is a unity, and it is > characteristic. social consciousness is also a distinctively human within and between groups because man's moral Calvinistic to stress the cultivation of interactivity stress the development of the intellect, it is also cooperation and association. If it is Calvinistic to them to foster and make richer use of their gifts for ments of rationality and insight, it is natural for natural for men to utilize and enjoy their endowtheir relations with their fellow men. Just as it is their neighbors, and also to develop and cultivate for men to seek the fellowship and friendship of eign functions. It is natural, in the Christian sense, tion, coequal with the family, having its own sover-Ula as one of the special spheres of human organizahim." Society is regarded in the Calvinistic formwas implanted in man by the One who created trine that a "gregarious instinct, a social impulse, a companion. It is an uncontested Calvinistic docgood that man should be alone," and created for him ionship of his fellow man. God saw that it "was not is by creation a social being requiring the companally unified humanity, there is the teaching that man In addition to the Scriptural account of a structur-

> the fashion in which the creature is to manifest his of God for human behavior not only, but it indicates Christian conduct and action. It expresses the will proper social attitude is contained the real basis for this compressed and concentrated formula for a fellow man and that was to love him as himself. In placed one dominant command with respect to his is, of course, the law of God. Upon mankind was lays heavy emphasis upon his social responsibility which unequivocally asserts his oneness and thus A third fundamental ground for a theory of man

3) Ibid, p. 101. 1) M. J. Bosma, Exposition of Reformed Doctrine, p. 87. 2) H. H. Meeter, Calvinism, p. 103.

uity to its philosophic origins. individualism in the American Calvinistic commusure, if someone were to trace the fealty to economic gressions. It would prove highly illuminating, I am fensive persons, and to punish or prevent these aglimit and restrain the aggressive tendencies of offunction minimally because its chief purpose is to he interferes with the rights of others; that the state no one's rights will be infringed upon any more than restrict the activities of each person in order that er role is to protect individuals from each other, to scription of the state as an organization whose propresemblance is also displayed in the frequent decriterion of proper and successful behavior. merce where the individual's pecuniary gain is the -and condoned-in the avenues of trade and comcsu pe tonud in the philosophy practically followed individual and the group. A sharply cut example Christian Reformed people today with respect to the the past two centuries and the views held by many doctrines of the social and economic humanists of astounding resemblance between the individualist tern of moral principles. There is undoubtedly an thought, unconsciously weaving it into its own patmunity has unknowingly absorbed much of its been strong and it may be that the Calvinist comhumanistic philosophy in the American culture has The influence of justification for such failure. responsibility, though it again provides no adequate planation for the failure to accept Christian social A third reason might provide a more accurate ex-their roles in the organism. that others may have the opportunity of fulfilling believer, has the obligation to use his talents in order member of the group, whether he be believer or unpermit man to pursue his unique assignment. Each the maintenance of such social conditions as will contribute to the extent of his God-given ability to clear. Every Christian bears the responsibility to of the Christian toward his neighbor becomes very to a special work* in that social organism, the task every man is unique in that God has appointed him composed of functionally related members and that tive Calvinistic ethic. If it is true that humanity is cept of social unity provides a foundation for a posisocial progress may emerge. Practically, the conto the Christian concept of society out of which porary society, at least in the hope of remaining true proach, if not in the hope of reorganizing contemmorality, the time is ripe for a reassertion of this apthe abandonment of the earlier stress on social Whatever the true reasons may be, however, for

4) C. De Boer, "The Menace of the Welfare State," Calvin Forum, October, 1952, p. 28. volves the role of the Christian in the society in this principle of human responsibility. The first in-At least two significant implications stand out in > and to his neighbor. has great and inescapable moral obligations to God > ignore one of the innate characteristics of men. to appeals of self-indulgence and self-protection upon the narrow view that men will respond only his nature. Those who would base a social ethic individualistic impulses, for it is already implicit in be induced within by appealing to his egoistic and tor personal gratification, nor something that need wards and punishments that play upon his desires imposed from without by erecting a system of reture, not something totally foreign that need be ends. Social responsibility is a facet of man's naoperate with them in the pursuit of common worthy low men, to accord them every consideration, to cothere rests upon man an obligation to serve his felnon-Christian, brown or pinkish-white, rich or poor, to one's neighbor, whoever he might be, Christian or brother. Rather, the deposition is that, with regard may rest on the Christian for behavior toward his son for contending that additional responsibilities of like precious faith, although some may find reabasis is presented for special behavior toward those Christians, for the law is a teacher to all men. No kind of behavior by Christians and another by nontween the believer and the unbeliever, to imply one clear. No argument is advanced to distinguish be-Christian action would appear to be abundantly The implications of such a theory of society for > have to look elsewhere for the reasons for his failure knowledges the created nature of things, we will tian social ethic. For the believer, then, who ac-Christian—and we are here concerned with a Chriscannot be advanced as a continuing excuse for the can explain only the failure of the unbeliever, and fusal to assent to the Divine will. But this answer be sure lies in the depravity of fallen man, the reand acknowledge our assignment? The answer to duty of man, why is it that we have failed to accept If such is the Christian concept of the nature and > to accept his role in society.

taulty identification, and hence untenable. Church in the same sphere with society—a clearly to the neighbor. But this concept would place the of love to the brethren replaced the command of love stituted for the social organism, and the command the body of Christ, the unity of believers, was subwere abrogated. According to this view, perhaps, the reciprocal obligations involved in that unity the original unity of mankind was destroyed and man had sinned and society had become imperfect, One reason might very well be the view that once in bringing the message of salvation by faith. whole of God's revelation and not as consisting only able, since the Calvinist regards the gospel as the accomplished. This view, however, is also untencome unimportant until the primary task has been kind and that his social responsibilities have be-Christian's primary function is to evangelize man-Another reason might be that as a result of sin the throughout the land. tion, and exhorting that righteousness shall prevail ship in advocating programs of human rehabilitafare to others, should assume a position of leaderto society by leaving the promotion of human welcommunity, instead of defaulting in its obligations should be heard in our communities. The Reformed takable summons. example of the early church: all provide an unmisof Jubilee, the parable of the good Samaritan, the warnings of the prophets, the Old Testament year every consideration that we have ourselves. his fellow—that he be given every opportunity and God includes an instruction to man with regard to purpose of doing the will of God. And the will of of establishing an estate upon this earth, but for the dowed with undeserved gifts, not for the purpose man, the farmer, and the laborer have all been engift of God. The teacher, the scientist, the businessment, every dollar he has is not his own, but is a Every capacity, every endowand inescapable. neighbors? The answer again seems perfectly clear fortunate and the oppressed—who are, of course, his dividual burden himself with the misery of the unmembers of society? To what extent must the inimplications of the Christian ethic for the individual inclined to hide behind its enormity, but what of the The scope of the social task is immense and one is theory of society may help to invigorate the social old serum in the form of a reanimated Christian grievously anemic. Perhaps an inoculation with an vinistic social ethic, if one existed, has become responsibility toward one's fellow man. The Caltional unity of society, and of the principle of social of a basic understanding of the concept of a funcship doctrine may have been turned aside for lack abilities and possessions. The impact of the stewardthe surplus talent, rather than to the whole of one's the point where it is applied to the marginal asset; doctrine seems often to have been watered down to implication. But the potency of the stewardship laid down the same injunction, drew forth the same The doctrine of Christian stewardship, of course, others, the vigorous approval of the Calvinists security, unemployment insurance, and a host of prove social conditions are introduced, such as social policies designed to eradicate inequities or to imit should support them with enthusiasm. Whenever ganizations devoted to the correction of injustices, have produced these evils. Wherever it finds orconcert with others, to remedy the conditions that ever it finds tragedy and despair it must strive, in leviate distress and poverty in the world. Wherehave already initiated programs and projects to alcan and must support those of its neighbors who could not hope to achieve very much by itself, but it quorg berrotean Reformed group the task of relieving this tremendous burden. It is riers to such performance and had better undertake with the problems of effectively eliminating the barthe Christian community had better concern itself low human beings are to perform their functions, low men is enormous. If these millions of our felthe magnitude of man's task with respect to his feltion for millions in our own country to realize that lack of opportunities for development and maturaship in wide sections of the world, or even of the of the deprivations of freedom of thought and worof epidemic malnutrition and starvation in Asia or world's population are imprisoned, of the conditions of the destitution in which large segments of the their role in society. One need only remind himself. that it is almost farcical to talk of their fulfilling whose opportunities for development are so limited economic environments are so impoverished and are, of course, millions of people whose political and peculiar functions in the social structure. their control, are incapable of performing their toward those of his fellows who, for reasons beyond nature and extent of the Christian's responsibility The second important implication deals with the necessary and constructive social activities.

by God's goodness, enter into and contribute to these civic and political programs, but he must, if qualified business, professional and labor organizations, in cipate in cooperative community enterprises, in contact with his fellow man. Not only may he partiwhich he is placed and in which he comes in daily

The Minister's Reading Habits

J. K. Van Baalen irst Christian Reformed Church

Pastor of the First Christian Reformed Church Edmonton, Alberts, Canada

congregation one must remain a step or two shead of the intellectuals in one's church, in at least one or two fields; and this is no small task. What, then, should an average minister read?

I

ourselves.) must be done. However, let us not run ahead of cent Peale)." Consequently, much outside reading of living, from its first cry to its last (Norman Viriany minister today must be close to the very pulse tremendously active and vigorous lives. daily contact with the world. They led themselves deeds fill that book did not shut themselves off from forgotten that the men of God whose words and the Bible regularly and prayerfully; but I have not member of the human race. I do, of course, read "But a minister is not just a minister—he is also a such give God sufficient time to speak to them? rest study a text to distill a sermon from it? Do a single chapter at "the family altar," and for the to do so? Are there none such among us who read do. But who would deny that some ministers fail should read in his Bible more than his parishioners It sounds almost like a platitude that a minister

Said the late Reverend B. H. Einink, "Most of our ministers never look at their Dogmatics after graduating from the seminary." Exaggerated? I aminclined to think so, If, however, there is only a small element of truth in that statement, it is bad enough.

All of us have weak memories, and strong "for-getters." Listening to classical examinations of candidates to the ministry over a period of thirty-seven years has convinced me that too many of our preachers have never grasped where the problems in theology lie, or no longer know it, let alone knowing the solution to these problems. They have a general impression of which direction the expected answer lies.

One result of this is a fear of a broad reading program; such men feel rather shaky; they instinctively feel unable to cope with opinions that might run contrary to their prejudices.

Another reason for ignoring Dogmatics is that systematic theology is far from popular today. Our growing Americanization forces a tendency in the opposite direction. The children of those pioneers who spent the long winter evening with an improving book how often think in terms of a motor trip ing book how often think in terms of a motor trip

In the April, 1952, issue of the Calvin Forum an article of mine appeared, headed One Great Need: An Appeal to Seminary Students. It was a plea for thorough and scholarly methods in preparing for the great task of preaching and shep-bending truth and did not overstate." strengthened in our conviction that we wrote the 1953, the same retired pastor writes "We have been tion of mind, etc. to really produce." In September, talents, but lack time e.a. necessary for concentra-Our men have capacities, powers, and minister. an encouragement to many a struggling, studious wilderness; but, if read, I am certain it will prove a new structure. Your article may be a cry in the the 'earnest' hearers, but one cannot call the product appeal or attitude thrown in here and there to satisfy sermon is a bundle of platitudes with an emotional sufficient research and mental athletics. Often a is too much tendency to prepare sermons without occasions to listen to brethren preachers, and there Church wrote, "As a retired minister I have many 1953, a retired minister of the Christian Reformed The article has elicited some comments. In May,

Saidt Its say of all this?

Our present-day environment and setup are, on the whole, antagonistic to thorough preparation for the pulpit. Singing, catchy melodies, liturgy, emotion are the order of the day. "There is too much preaching already," an Episcopal minister informed me: "my sermons are never longer than ten or twelve minutes; 'Continued in our next' is my twelve minutes; 'Continued in our next' is my motto."

A three-year seminary course punctuated by much outside work to enable the student to "pay his way through school," over against a five-year study period abroad: it is pitiable indeed. Perhaps another article for ministers (as suggested by my retired colleague) might prove helpful rather than appear condemnatory.

Some words of encouragement are long overdue, for the tempo of modern life is increasingly hostile to solid reading. First we had the radio, with a stranger walking right into our living rooms with his "Do it now; today is the time" suggestions; but now it is television with its time-robbing, ninety percent worthless stuff. For all that, a minister who tails to understand that reading is one of his chief duties for which the time must at all costs be reducies for which the time must at all costs be reducied is bound to end a failure. To build up a bigoted and sectarian. whose basic philosophy is false, is bound to remain tacts because they are pointed out to him by one discovers or enunciates them. The man who fears stubborn things," and they are true, no matter who gin and relates them to God and man. Facts are philosophy whereby he traces his facts to their oritious 'system of knowledge." It is his underlying But that is a horse of a different color from a fictibasic philosophy may be his 'erroneous system,'' of accurate information he has concerning facts. His gregate of knowledge. It consists of the sum total Bs ns and nam A "..hturt evitaler" yna ereht zi roM course, no such thing as a 'system of knowledge.'' to ei eratains relative truths.". There is, of basically false (altho because of God's common tormation) in future sermons. again, and incoporate some of its truth (factual indid. So I prize the book; and I intend to read it poraries, and why they re-acted toward Him as they formation on the way of thinking of Jesus' contem--ni bətnəmuoob bns yilələk and documented in seldom encountered a book which in so small a comtion of our Lord is far from adequate. Yet, I have any one to inform me that Doctor Fosdick's evaluathor: Harry Emerson Fosdick. Now, I do not need cents. The title: The Man from Nazareth. The au-Book volume for the negligible outlay of twenty-five I picked from among much trash another Pocket bush may blossom forth," so on my recent vacation prickly aloe plants occasionally an unexpected rose-Take a recent example in hand. 'As among the

III

Yes, a minister should read widely. He should be like the bee that gathers its honey from many flowers. "The first thing,' I have told my students as an ex-professor of Homiletics, 'they should do is to read poetry; for that develops the imagination.'" So said Dr. Frederick Loetscher upon my first visit at his Princeton home.

And how is the minister going to do it all, in spite of the fact that too much work is thrown into his lap that should be done by a secretary or an elder? By "giving heed unto his way." For one thing, God did not call a minister to be half a mechanic. Nor does a congregation pay a minister a salary to do his wife's washing and ironing. A preacher need not plant his own potatoes.

Then, too, there are two secrets that must be learned. The one, already referred to, is that of mastering tidbits of time: The other, that of developing a taste for reading. When a man feels depleted after two or three mental explosions on a Sunday, replenishing his mental stock on Monday morning should be to him relaxation rather than hard work. One should acquire the habit of feeling lost without a book or a paper in one's hand, at least upon one's knees.

to Florida in January, followed by a similar excursion to Alaska in midsummer.

Yet a sermon without a doctrinal foundation or background—even though not itself in the field of Dogmatics—is apt to end in generalities and vagueness. Doctrine nowadays has to be spoonfed, in small dosages and in concentrated form. This can be done only by men whose dogmatics have been so thoroughly assimilated with the very warp and woof of their personalities that they can make things profound look simple. And this calls for a life-long study of theology.

I

A minister should read the daily newspaper: "We listen to the radio" is not enough. Then, too, in our own church some sixteen or more publications now appear regularly, and the minister should read in most of these.

In addition to all this odd-moments' work he should take a look at Theology Today and the Westminster Theological Journal, the latter if only for its excellent and enlightening book reviews. And how a man can even moderately claim to understand the religious atmosphere in which he lives without the weekly reading of The Christian Century is completely beyond this writer.

They who are fortunate enough to be able to keep, through reading, in touch with the Netherlands, that fountainhead of Reformed theology and churchlife, should read at least one such paper as Gereformeerd Weekblad.

All of this, together with either Newsweek or Time Magazine, to trace God's finger in l'histoire contemporaine, will consume much of a minister's leisure time. Half hours and quarter hours will have to be rescued from the "wasted" hours of which there are too many in most lives.

Yet it is only after all this has been disposed of that a minister's more serious reading task begins. If a man is satisfied with reading one or two com-

It a man is satisfied with reading one or two commentaries to gather his sermon material—for sermons that must be made week upon week, twice a Sunday to the same listeners—his sermons will lack that small measure of originality or individuality that should mark every man's efforts; and he will become co-responsible for the oft-heard complaint, "Most of those Christian Reformed ministers all preach alike." Commentaries should be read chiefly to awaken out of the unconscious mind thoughts planted and half buried there as a result of much earlier reading.

Long and quiet hours of reading, together with much thinking—the hardest but most fruitful of all human labor—will prevent such ideas as the one recently exhibited in a Christian Reformed paper, when a minister voiced his opinion that "the unbeliever's system of knowledge, as a result of sin, is library left, but I do not yield an inch of ground to Bible class; but now, after ten years, he has his to town, he could put rings around me in our weekly said of a former minister, "When that man first came On the other hand, years ago an intelligent elder aliquid haeret!" So the slogan is "Carpe diem!" "Lege, lege, semper calls." redeem valuable hours from time-robbing special ing a fitting word upon occasional contacts, so as to Van Andel, one of whose secrets was that of "speak-Perhaps we shall have to learn from the late J.

words, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" ancolew eat-espection along other lines—the welcome anticipation that I may hear some day—in spite of solitude it imposes, I take heart from the hopeful As for me, when I weary of reading, and of the > genius that spelled five percent inspiration and sense; it was hard work. Genius? No doubt; but the and numerous books in English. Talent, that? Non-German, five in Dutch, more than sixty in Chinese, hind two books in Japanese, one in Siamese, seven in restless pioneer, traveled incessantly, and left beleft sixty books from his own pen. Karl Gutsall, Self-made John Bunyan lived sixty years—and > flabby, need a minister's brain go limp. At the funthan the muscles in the blacksmith's arm grow Nor has age anything to do with it. No more ninety-five percent perspiration.

fresh supplies of information continuously to give him by the hour because "his active mind needed for him to do his own reading, he had others read to body through prolonged illness had grown too weak Metherlands, it was recently stated that when his eral of my sixty-two year old brother in Zeist, him food for thought."

From Our Correspondents

752 Giddings S.E.

October 12, 1953 Grand Rapids 6, Mich.

The Calvin Forum. The Editor,

commitments.

Dear Dr. De Boer:

formed circles for many years because of his ability authority who has been held in high esteem in Recriticism of one and the same author, an author and a whole issue of our Calvin Forum is devoted to a formed scholars. Yet I regret that the major part of formed scholars are carefully weighed by other Regood thing that views propounded by certain Reformed philosophy and theology. It is doubtlessly a from this recognized scholar in the fields of Renary. It is, of course, anyone's privilege to differ tions held by Prof. C. Van Til of Westminster Semiemphases characterizing some of the posi-

these were in criticism of approaches and a total of four regular articles. Three of THE latest issue of The Calvin Forum carried der discussion. thrust characterizing the first two contributions un-However, what grieves me is the tone and general and because of his loyalty to our historic Calvinistic tency." And page seven carries this sub-title for ercise in Ambiquity," and "Apologetics by Inconsis-Jungles of Westminster's Apologetics," "An Ex-But the cover page lists them as follows: fessor Van Til's Apologetics," and "On Brute Facts." They read as follows: "The New Apologetic," "Pro-The actual titles of the three articles are objective.

owt triese latter titles comes to the fore in the first two ings? What good can they produce? And the thrust Why should the staff employ these offensive headthe second article: "A Linguistic Bramble Patch."

articles repeatedly. Why should this be?

cuts and smarts; it beclouds and drives apart. It in our polemics at all? I for one do not think so. It fellow-believer? Should we use this barbed weapon to use ridicule when one discusses the views of a Furthermore, is it fair, wise, and Christ-like ever the Apostle (Phil. 2:3), "in lowliness of mind each we have learned to take to heart the admonition of in heart." And let us give evidence of the fact that spirit of the Master who said ''I am meek and lowly and severely if need be, but let us ever do so in the with mutual appreciation. Let us criticize frankly cuss our findings and considerations objectively and tions by faulty methods of discussion; but let us disstimulate blind prejudices and uncalled-for separaity. Let us not attack each other uncharitably, nor We of the Reformed faith form but a small minordoes not tend to clarify, convince, and win.

We must work together toward a solution of our Moreover, we need each other!

counting other better than himself."

same cause. We have a common enemy and a comvin are two kindred training camps, serving the selfworkers; we are allies! And Westminster and Cal-We are not antagonists. We are brethren and cocommon problems related to a common assignment.

isms and separations. We may not do so! We cannot afford to foster unnecessary antagon-mon warrare.

ity and Communism mixed which accounts for the tremendous gains Communism is making.

Many of our people are Socialists and Communists and they do not know it. When the Communists took over China the road was opened for them by the Modernists who mistook Chinese Communism for a mere movement for agrigarian reform. Even some of our own men were fooled by it. Too late we found out our mistake. They did not see the Antithesis. Let us beware! The Kingdom of God is a spiritual and a heavenly Kingdom, not one of this earth.

татеглалу, втатеглану, втатеглания обще

Dr. Cecil De Boer Editor of the Calvin Forum Dear Dr. De Boer:

issue of the Forum the following reflections on the Forum's recent attack on the apologetic of Dr. Cornelius Van Til?

I certainly am not opposed to controversy among brethren in the sense of objective discussion of significant differences. We shall always need controversy of that kind. The history of Christian doctrine tells us that it has often served to bring truth to light and to make possible precise formulation of truth. And I have not the slightest objection to an objective expert appraisal of Van Til's apologetic. It is due, and I shall welcome it.

However, I do regret certain aspects of the aforesaid attack. With your permission I shall indicate a few of those aspects.

The reader could easily get the impression that the attack was launched unitedly by the faculties of Calvin College and Seminary. Inasmuch as the Forum is published by a board consisting of those taculties, there would seem to be logic in the Contention of "A Letter from Ripon" in the October issue: "The Calvin Forum represents the thought of the combined faculties of Calvin College and Seminary." And yet, few members of those faculties knew that this attack was forthcoming. I for one was not aware of the existence—to say nothing of the content—of the articles concerned until they appeared in the Forum. I think the public is entitled peared in the Forum. I think the public is entitled to those facts.

I object to your indiscriminate use of the term "Westminster's apologetic." It could be misunder-stood. If you mean that Van Til's apologetic is being are obviously right. If you mean that Van Til's colleagues are in some measure responsible for the fact that this apologetic is taught at Westminster, you are right again. Beyond all doubt, they deem Van Til's apologetic deserving of a respectful hearing. But if you mean that Westminster Seminary has officially adopted Van Til's apologetic in toto and has officially adopted Van Til's apologetic in toto and has Mor should we be disturbed if we cannot immediately see eye to eye on every issue. Particularly not if the issues are complex and still in the discussion stage.

I am confident, Mr. Editor, that I am voicing the sentiments of hundreds of your readers. And—lest I be misunderstood—I would address these words to all our leaders and writers for their most earnest and prayerful consideration.

, miH ni suov, yours Fraternally, yours Mousiana Mousiana

have often wondered if some of the articles

S a regular reader of the Calvin Forum I

Iron Springs, Alberta. Sept. 25, 1953. The Calvin Forum, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Dear Editor:-

We become as children we cannot as much as see the Kingdom of God.

Now I may be wrong but it seems to me that in writing on the Antithesis many who claim to believe it are nevertheless trying to get rid of it or at least are trying to tone it down. It furthermore seems to me that many of us are trying under the cover of Common Grace to make it comfortable for cover of Common Grace to make it comfortable for ourselves in this world which is at enmity with God.

The Word of God is such that it speaks to children as well as to adults. We are even told that unless seems to me that the common man can understand.

Surely this is not the purpose of these discussions. When our Synod adopted the three points in regard to Common Grace it put in a very strong warning against using these points as a loophole to let the world into the church. Is this not what is hap-Pening today?

Our great danger today is not that we are trying to flee out of the world but rather that we are becoming conformed to the world. The spirit of ecumenicism is rampant and it is imposing a yoke on us which is an unequal one, against which we are warned. The church in the past has not taken a stand against the evils of Capitalism and the result is Socialism and Communism. Today the pendulum of the clock is swinging the other way and the of the clock is swinging the other way and the Ospelo of Christ is watered down to a mere movement of social reform. People are getting Christianment of social reform.

fore should, I think, have been retracted. of fact both offensive and disrespectful and theretended." The language referred to was as a matter disrespect toward Westminster Seminary was inber issue, that "no offense to Professor Van Til or but not fully satisfied, with your notice in the Octoanything else. Permit me to add that I am pleased, respect and belligerency. That I regret more than appraisal is marred at more points than one by discisely there is the rub. Undeniably the Forum's coupled with brotherly love and esteem. But pre-Til's apologetic were characterized by objectivity than I have done, if the Forum's evaluation of Van Therefore I would not at this juncture demur further the cause of truth. Rather, it must be threshed out. and pretend that it does not exist would hardly serve on an important matter. To ignore that difference

I hope and pray that, when the smoke of the present battle shall have lifted, the faculties of Calvin College and Seminary and the faculty of Westminster Theological Seminary may be seen standing shoulder to shoulder in the defense and furtherance of the Reformed faith.

Cordially yours,
R. B. KUIPER

household of the Reformed faith a sharp difference clear that there exists among brethren within the faith. However, the matter has another angle. It is united front to the many enemies of the Reformed eratum that Calvin and Westminster present a seems most regrettable, for it is an obvious desid-At first blush that Department of Apologetics, an attack upon Westminster, particularly upon its faculties of Calvin College and Seminary, launches of the Calvin Forum, published by the combined tort. Lo and behold, the September, 1953, number opposition the men of Westminster have held the Hyper-Calvinists. In the face of truly tremendous as may be described, for want of a better name, as Modernists, Arminians, Dispensationalists, and such stances vicious, attacks by Old Modernists, New it has been subjected to violent, and in some incisely because of its adherence to the Reformed faith that task in exceedingly hostile surroundings. Prea quarter century now Westminster has performed be sure, yet, we may believe, earnestly. For almost faith. Each is upholding that faith imperfectly, to Westminster—both committed to the Reformed Here are two institutions of learning—Calvin and set it up as a standard of orthodoxy, you are mis-

Book Reviews

to say what he thought about practically everything. ordered Hugh Walpole from his house, and had the money Sitwell in public, reported the election of the last Pope, ness to the Christian faith. He debated the vitriolic Edith wide world, and was privileged to become an effective witof Wight. He had extraordinary friendships, travelled the Noyes spent most of his life in baronial splendor on the Isle his faith before great men. Noyes to Christianity. He was given the grace to defend Mystical awareness, enlightened reason, and experience led olic faith, to which he was coverted, in the highest places. Above all one admires Moyes' vigorous detense of the Cathtruths to his readers instead of concentrating on the faults." truths in him, "there is immense value in discovering these philosophy he repudiated, that he is worth studying for the He says of Voltaire whose remarkably fine sympathy. ring. His mysticism is moving, and with it he combines a his courage for throwing such a glove into the intellectual mate of Joyce's Ulysses as a "foul chaos," one must admire courage is unusual. Whatever one may think of his estivious. His rare devotion to his art is heartwarming. tundamental kindliness, charm, and religious zeal are obnever confuses himself with Milton. His sense of humor, poet, and although he sometimes quotes praise too freely, succeeds in portraying himself. Noyes was a good minor ter. But in portraying these and many others, Noyes also and his ironic humor; H. G. Wells with his boundless blussing people while the scratches remain; gloomy Dean Inge torrential comment at The Pines; Gosse's velvet paw caresof personalities there is in the book. Swinburne pouring out cracies Noyes has a real gift in uncovering. What a parade The book teems with vivid personalities whose idiosyn-his work a Victorian echo. is misdirected, confused, and ephimeral. All this makes of Pound, Auden, or Harte Crane. For Noyes, modern poetry art except through aversion. There is no mention of Eliot, where of the impact of modern poetry upon his thought or religious faith authoritarian. There is no evidence anyand scene. His political sympathies are conservative; his practice is Tennysonian in its emphasis upon song, sound, Noyes' poetic taste and remarkably Victorian temper. What strikes one particularly in the autobiography is its form the foundations for the baronial luxuries on the Isle of fint and steel of the Thomas Woodbridges whose efforts Mesopotamia, Ohio. He forgets the raw, rough hands, the hewers of wood and the drawers of water. Moyes forgets the volume ignores however is how the other half lives—the of the highest social circles during the last fifty years. What guide. It gives a sense of tradition, of the color and style amusing tour through aristocratic society with an expert Two Worlds for Memory is charming and pleasant, an

Wight.

Salvin College JOHN LIMMERMAN

TWO WORLDS

New York: The World Publishing Company. THE BOUNTY LANDS. By William D. Ellis. Cleveland and

.29604 204

York: J. B. Lippincott Company. 1953. 340 pages.

TWO WORLDS FOR MEMORY. By Alfred Noyes.

fruits of the Bounty Lands. on the Isle of Wight got part of its foundation from the Thomas Woodbridge's trek with the ox cart. Noyes' palace in golden chariots would have been impossible without than a hundred years apart, and a large part of Noyes' career Abraham and Edison; yet the events are only a little more Memory lies a gap almost as great as that between and the purple and fine linen of Two Worlds for ETWEEN the raw Ohio woods of The Bounty Lands

Hergesheimer, and Drums along the Mohawk by Edmonds. Giants in the Earth by Roelvaag; The Limestone Tree by great frontier stories as O Pioneers! by Willa Cather; nunsnal calibre, seems to me, to place it in the rank of such The Bounty Lands is a first book by a newcomer, but its intelligence and patience. glad to see ruthless "manifest destiny" outdone by credible imperial ambitions on the part of Easterners, and one is an epic scope. Furthermore, Mesopotamia is the focus of ture, Indians, and short-sighted comrades; yet it moves in It is a simple linear story of struggle, struggle against naof earth, daring, and hogs. The story keeps one from bed. Tom Woodbridge, the hero, had as he built an empire out and imagination, unflagging vigor and relentless pluck, these bridge is magnificently handled. Granite and fire, courage the density of real life. The character of Tom Woodits courage in the face of savage raids by Wyandots have farm of civilization, its back-breaking labor in growing food, and rare triumphs. Its cultural agony in effecting some tamia, Ohio comes alive in its struggles, deteats, heartbreaks, interest of plot. The struggling border village of Mesoposubject matter, vividness of characterization, and consuming The Bounty Lands has unusual excellence in density of rare intervals marred by untoward expressions. unadorned, and sometimes prosaic. The dialog is at very in-law incredibly artful and scheming. The style is plain, himself at times becomes incredibly stubborn, and his fathersometimes melodramatic, but the interest holds. Woodbridge comes cloudy, the threads unravel, the coincidences are The novel has its weaknesses. The plot sometimes bein his autobiography I wo World for Memory. to Mr. Noyes, whose world of silks and satins is described lavish truit was enjoyed by English lecturers from Dickens and established the toundations of empire, an empire whose Tom Woodbridge and Mesopotamia, Ohio laid the course made money from poetry; instead of starving in a garret Noyes was born with a silver spoon in his mouth. He Warfel is too good a scholar not to buttress his conclusions the record, they have done almost no good." Professor untold harm, and, except as they have added a few facts to science results in non-sense. Says he, "They have done non-science and to point out that in many cases their non-Professor Warfel does not hesitate to brand their work as reject the old, but do not offer an adequate substitute for it. cation, they will have none of a rule-ridden grammar. They any system with rules stands in the way of progressive educultural levels which mean so much in their theory. Since with a formidable array of facts.

to be observed by linguists in their scientific endeavors. Warfel discusses several general considerations which ought these two. In the concluding chapter of the book Professor used. The remaining twelve breathe as sane a spirit as do statisticians for the proper validation of the kind of evidence selected as conform to the standard requirements devised by that in usage studies such facts and samples should be is salutary." The second flows from the first and decrees language and that modesty becoming to this generalization gotten, that "no one person can learn all the facts about is a good one and declares the obvious truth, so easily forin the scientific study of language usage. The first of these He lays down fourteen principles which should be observed Professor Warfel, however, is not exclusively negative.

read this book, which is a very important one. I conclude as I began. Every teachers of English should

Calvin College Ј. С. Улиреи Воѕсн

SPIRITUAL RICHES

Publishing Co.: Grand Rapids. 300 pp. Price $4.50. Sermons From Job. Ву John Calvin. Wm. В. Eerdman's maligned by some, ignored by many, and yet recognized as and thus finding real life. Such a man was John Calvin of joy must be like him—losing their lives for his sake ${f T}$ ESUS lived intensely. Those who would know fullness

one of God's noblemen, mixed as being among the best sermons Calvin ever probook presents selected sermons from Job which are recogown estimation, John Calvin was first of all a preacher. This demonstrated in his commentaries. We forget that in his Institutes, and as the penetrating exegete of Scripture as the great reformer of Geneva, as the brilliant author of the What was the service he rendered? We think of him as ing Calvin's sermons. The value of the book is enhanced lightful reading and constitutes a valuable guide in evaluatten by the Rev. Harold Dekker. This introduction is de-At the beginning one finds an extensive introduction writ-real tood for the soul. senting doctrine but did so in such fashion that it might be heart as well as with his mind. He was intent upon preevidence of the fact that in the pulpit Calvin spoke with his gifted dogmatician but also a careful exegete, and they give They confirm the impression that Calvin was not only a tical character, simplicity, and constant theocentric emphasis. Upon reading these sermons one appreciates their prac-written by a man who was endowed with exceptional gifts perennial challenge of suffering in human experience. It is volume. It deals with a book which faces us with that It is to be expected that many will be attracted to this

2,585 ILLUSTRATIONS

pages. Prices $5.95. er. Zondervan Publishing House: Grand Rapids. 675 ENCYCLOPEDIA OF ILLUSTRATIONS. By Henry Ward Beech-

The sermons and addresses of a great preacher re-HIS volume contains 2,585 illustrations gleaned from

Herein he was only following the example found in the Bible to be appreciated, must be presented in concrete fashion. is evident that he understood that the truths of Scripture, the Shakespeare of the modern pulpit. From this book it which he presented his stirring messages. He has been called nowned for the picturesque and graphic manner in has limited value. of observation and experience so that a volume of this type still true that the dest illustrations are those which arise out of the best which has come to my aftention. However, it is When compared with other volumes of this nature, it is one various themes and then again are thoroughly indexed. and striking metaphors. All of these are presented under This book is a vertiable encyclopedia of unusual stories

Grand Rapids, Michigan GEORGE GRITTER

PRESCRIPTIVE NOT DESCRIPTIVE

VERY teacher of English should read Who Killed University of Florida Press, 1952. $2.50. WHO KILLED GRAMMAR? By Harry R. Warfel, Gainesville:

ually becoming stronger. lish Journal and College English, an influence that is gradof English and its publications, among them being the Enginfluence exerted today by the National Council of Teachers deal of solid use. He should do so especially in view of the eighty-seven pages, offers any language student a vast Grammar?, a booklet, which, though numbering only cesses of language as to be able scientifically to determine teacher of English to be so thoroughly trained in the proscribe what is correct and to proclaim the duty of every have gone so far as to deny grammarians the right to prein any way serve as a basis for the study of grammar. Some usage, and especially that of spoken informal-discourse, can not propriety, not beauty of sound or appearance, but only mar cannot but be in a fluid state. Not logical correctness, character. Since a living language always changes, grainwhich has been "prescriptive" rather than "descriptive" in repudiate the conventional grammar of American English strisen, who, accepting usage as the sole law of language, During the last twenty-hve years, a group of linguists has what is proper usage in any specific situation.

clearly defined either the nature or the boundaries of the wrong use of the principle of divided usage. They have not ridiculed the traditional grammars. They have made a On the basis of only a few dubious statements they have and a general dislike of all formal language study prevails. science, says he, has proved disastrous, so that confusion but accuses them of not being scientific enough. Their nonnot disagree with the aim of the new linguists to be scientific a severe critic of the new school and its efforts. He does same schools, and are still friends, but Professor Warfel is Warfel were born and reared in the same town, attended the of the leading spokesmen of the new school. Both Fries and Professor Charles Carpenter Fries of Ann Arbor is one tian education must avoid. soul-life of man opens the way to a syncretism which Chris-The absence of a scriptural approach to psychology or the place to personal communication in learning and teaching. sonality will reconstruct the growth concept to give a vital conception of personality. A scriptural conception of perconcept as viewed in modern thought is based on a false tellowship? The author has failed to see that the growth tion, so essential in the development of personality through does this do justice to direct, person to person communications of the teacher in the classroom, thinks Eavey. But periences toward predetermined ends are the primary funcin which the learner engages. Selecting and arranging exthor looks upon teaching mainly as controlling the activities learning and teaching. This becomes evident when the aubut thinks that growth as such is an adequate concept for distinctively Christian learning and teaching process. and personality as goal in education, the outcome will be a tural foundation. If this is done with the growth concept but a reconstruction of non-Christian thinking on a scripsynthesis of non-Christian thought with the Christian view, a syncretism. What we seek in Christian education is not a tive God-centered concept of life, the author again falls into world of experience. Because of the absence of an effecer in his commitment to the truth masters himself and his comes truly man-centered in a derived sense when the learncommitment to the truth as made known by God and beginal personality. Education is first God-centered in its human personality, must be viewed in relation to God, oritered, and human personality is the goal of education, genuine true that with relation to the world education is man-centian virtues rooted in the new life in Christ. While it is ality in general, of course, but personality embodying Chrisauthor makes personality the goal of education, not personthe goal in terms of truth and commitment thereto. The sufficiently aware of a God-centered concept of life to define equestional ideal that makes growth its own goal, he is not should consider. While the author does reject the current growth concept is another difficulty that Christian teachers Closely allied to the author's failure to reconstruct the principle of life in the development of personality. recognizes the life of the spirit, but fails to make spirit the the dimensions of life, especially soul-life. The author cation. The person experiencing is being reconstructed in change takes place in the dimensions of being through eduof the personality in the spirit. Then being is primary, and unbiblical when we recognize that the Bible teaches the unity cussion. Now it should be clear that this view is thoroughly unity is more organismic than personal throughout this disreconstruction of experience are made fundamental and characteristic of modern educational theory. Change and cation, he falls victim to the depersonalization of education evident. In his urge to make personality supreme in edulearning that the constant danger of syncretism becomes It is especially in the author's discussion of integrating commended for his efforts and his important contribution. learning and teaching process. Professor Eavey is to be basis for and understanding of a distinctively Christian We as Christian teachers are struggling to attain a clearer

Calvin College Cornelius Jaarsma

> the Word of God. John Calvin, but one learns to appreciate even more fully only learn to know Job or become better acquainted with tood, however, that in reading these sermons one does not and for whom many of us have great esteem. Be it under> sented them orally in their original language. they were perhaps much more readily understood as he prefairness to the author, however, it must be remembered that of the sentences are not only lengthy but even obscure. In study of these sermons constitutes a real discipline. Many is gold in them but the mining of it is not easy. In fact, the that some of these sermons are difficult to understand. There One would not preach thus today. It must be admitted > itual treasures be stored in many a believing heart. this volume find entrance into many a home and its rich spir-Both publisher and translator are to be commended. May

Grand Rapids, Michigan GEORGE GRITTER

GOOD LEVCHING

91.88 Kapids: Zondervan Publishing House, 1953, 298 pages. THE ART OF EFFECTIVE TEACHING. By C. A. Eavey. Grand

ers not deeply schooled in philosophy, psychology, and the educational theory and practice that many Christian ment count. He is making a contribution to Christian MROFESSOR EAVEY is making his days of retire-like, this book sets forth the basic principles of effective teachers will greatly appreciate. In readable style for teachers astray and defeat the Christian objective in education. author contends, modern thinking will lead Christian teachin the framework of thinking based on the Bible, so the make to Christian teaching. But unless carefully appraised theory and practice of our time has a vital contribution to The author has become convinced that the educational gardance; unit planning; the creative character of integration method in relation to the teacher's personality; teaching as istics of the learning process; the nature and significance of in the experience of the learner; the self-active characterprocess of learning; the place and significance of felt needs lowing: the significance of teacher-pupil purpose in the work understandingly. Among these features are the folvalue to the Christian teacher who desires to go about his This book has many excellent features that are of great cessful attempt to pursue a Christian course throughout. tian thinker who makes an earnest and in many ways sucthought with some confidence too, for the author is a Chrishelpful suggestions in this book. He may follow the line of of the learning process in Christian education will find many teaching process more in keeping with better understanding the assignment-study-recite technique and replace it with a The Christian teacher who gradually wants to break with in learning; effective appraisal; etc.

read with care and judge for himself concerning the validity which should be mentioned so that the Christian teacher may Critical appraisals do bring some things to light, however,

of the author's views, osophies of life in which current thinking views the concept, seeks to detach it from the naturalistic and humanistic philcept of modern education in the process of learning. He The author seems to go all the way with the growth-con-disturbing matter. Reader, if you want something solid to sidt ni erutqirəs mort tagil redrut to been edt eleet egaol tery or not. The denomination to which this reviewer be-

Kalamazoo, Mich. ТОНИ УМИРЕК РЕОБЕ

ABBREVIATION OF AN ABBREVIATION

van: Grand Rapids. 215 pages. Price $2.95. Compiled and abridged by David O. Fuller. CHOICE SERMON NOTES. By Charles Haddon Spurgeon.

the message of the Word to the Church of Christ. this book to all who are charged with the task of bringing that fact alone will certainly warrant the recommendation of tion of some of "Spurgeon's Sermon Notes." Knowledge of The book under consideration is a compilation and condensasovereign grace in a most simple and captivating manner. Scuins for presenting the protound truth of the gospel of sermons will convince the reader of Spurgeon's remarkable Pulpiteer:" Even a casual reading of any volume of his been called, "The Prince of Preachers," and "A Master tions of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Spurgeon has frequently valued as timely, instructive, inspirational presenta-LTHOUGH Charles Haddon Spurgeon has now been dead for more than sixty years, his sermons are still to read a whole volume of notes. profitable to read a few complete sermons of Spurgeon than and brilliance of Spurgeon as a preacher it would be more one would become fully acquainted with the striking style of the real sermon delivered. It hardly needs saying that if the very nature of the case we have here, then, abbreviations mon Motes." They are notes on sermons delivered. By noticed nonetheless, that it is a volume of "Spurgeon's Ser-Although this book can be well commended it should be work suffers because it is an abridgment. rather important subpoints have been deleted. In short this again there are several instances where it appears that some points of the sermon of Spurgeon have been omitted. And However, there is more than one instance where whole main body of thought or points which are slightly repetitions. deleting points which are of little importance to the main such. At times Fuller seems to have been very careful in there are also frequent deletions from the body of notes a Spurgeon had appended to his own sermon notes. However, by deleting some of the excerpts from various authors that as possible. He has accomplished this abridgment mainly Fuller has been very careful to keep as much of Spurgeon few if any abridgments are as good as the original work. breviation of an abbreviation. It is a recognized fact that That makes the present work under consideration an ab-Fuller's compilation is an abridgment of Spurgeon's Notes, It must further be observed that what we really have in as presented in any volume of the recently republished Meof Preachers" it would be well first to read Spurgeon in full In order to gain the greatest appreciation for the "Prince

morial Library Series.

chew on, by all means get Divorce, and read it for yourself.

DIVORCE. By John Murray. The Committee on Christian AVEOUBLE STUDIES ON DIVORCE

ere Road, Phillipsburg, New Jersey. $2.50. Education, The Orthodox Presbyterian Church, Belvid-careful study and a wide circulation. view is a step in that direction, and therefore deserves both stored to their rightful place again. The book under re-Bible, if decency and honor in marriage are ever to be reand bounds. We must get back to God, and back to the which cries out to God for vengeance as it grows by leaps the Lord" is the only antidote to our widespread divorce evil for his painstaking efforts to point the way. "Thus saith There is but one answer, and we are grateful to Mr. Murray the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" is yielding a harvest which ought to make us shudder. 'If rance concerning God's Word and its teachings on divorce runs, may read the lesson which these statistics teach. Ignoriages at the time these figures were computed. Whoever vorce rate had risen to a shocking one in every five marmated to engage in regular family worship now. The ditury. Only five percent of professing Christians are estibecome rapidly worse in this first half of the twentieth censtood at one in every thirty-three marriages. Things have people still had a family altar. The divorce rate at that time years ago the homes of fifty percent of Christian of America is authority for the statement that forty LEAFLET published by the Family Altar League are completed. clusions after the thorough and scholarly studies in exegesis reader by giving in summary clear statements of his conof Paul, 4. Practical Cases. The author greatly aids the Provision, 2. The Teaching of Our Lord, 3. The Teaching deal with the following matters: I. The Old Testament book form. The four chapters which constitute this book it was made possible for this material to be presented in years 1946 through 1949. It was a happy circumstance that divorce as a series of articles for that publication during the call that Mr. Murray originally presented these studies on Readers of the Westminster Theological Journal will re-possibly second to none. His book is well worth the price. is a book which reveals its author to be an assiduous exegete sound and scholarly exegesis lest it come to nought. Divorce tions in our time. Holy zeal in this matter must be based on divorce menace which has assumed such alarming proporray to the end that he may become a crusader against the pastor should avail himself of these valuable studies of Murthinking of many an average man on the street. Every brilliant presentations undoubtedly seeped through into the on marriage from the Roman Catholic point of view. Sheen's when the latter was presenting a series of radio messages ion. This reviewer recalls listening to Fulton John Sheen popularize what he has here presented in such erudite fash-One might wish that Dr. Murray would find it possible to obtained an unscriptural divorce are living in continual adulto the moot question whether those who remarry after having on Dr. Murray's part if he would give further consideration of the marriage bond. Third, it would be a valuable service I Corinthians 7:15 in any sense legitimates the dissolution are those who will surely challenge Murray's conclusion that and, whenever necessary, prepared to refute. Second, there divorce with which we as Protestants should be familiar effectively and convincingly with Roman Catholic views on Three remarks in conclusion. First, Murray deals most thorough study of the doctrine of angels good and evil. date, however, there is no single orthodox classic which gives work of angels in his book, The Providence of God. To With Gabriel, as well as Berkhouwer's notification on the have received from the Netherlands Arjen Miedema's Talks evil angels under the guidance of Satan. More recently we tape Letters, in which he sought to show the work of the ten years ago C. S. Lewis presented his fantasy, The Screwlong neglected Biblical doctrine of angels. Almost there seems to have been a revival of interest in the TERHAPS you have noticed that in the last decade believer. a devotional tone which edifies and brings comfort to the angels. He is to be commended, however, in maintaining somewhat encyclopedic reference book on the doctrine of proof for the doctrine of angels. Mr. Linton has given a He has given us a brief lucid presentation of Scripture lieve in angels." In that, he has succeeded admirably well. right presentation of Bible evidence indicating why I besophical dissertation embracing metaphysics, but a forthpurpose is not to give "an exhaustive study nor a philo-Mr. Linton explains in the forward of his book that his sideration such a needed work was to be found. However, It was this reviewer's hope that in the book under con-

Jenison, Mich.

J. HASPER

(man) a little lower than God." terpretation of Psalm 8 so as to read "thou has made him sion which is also, no doubt, intentional, is the possible in-Jacob's wrestling with the Angel of Jehovah. Another omisthat at two different times (cf. pp 27, 73) he has mentioned the Trinity. This discussion is omitted in spite of the fact in the Old Testament is in reality the Second Person of commonly accepted interpretation that the angel of Jehovah er, apparently intentionally omitted any reference to the would prove to be profitable to the believer. He has, furthrelationship to good angels and man. Such a discussion tentionally omitted a discussion of the evil angels in their only casual reference. It is to be noted that the author inconsidered either have been omitted or glossed over with however. Several things which ought to have been carefully The brevity of the author has proven to be his weakness, the same way as man suffers, time. On page 67 the author speaks of God as suffering in ferring to the gathering of the Jews to Palestine at the end by giving a onesided interpretation of Matt. 24:31 as repelled from heaven. On page 48 Mr. Linton shows his bias cerning the time when Satan and the evil angels where exand 47 we find a discrepancy in the author's thought connesses in the author's argument. In comparing pages 19 Besides the things omitted there are several other weakough book on this subject is still wanting. sulted in an inadequate treatment of angelology. A thor-In short the author's determination to be brief has re-

Eerdmans Publishing Co. 85 pp. Price $1.00. REPORT ON "I BELIEVE IN ANGELS," By John Linton.

HIS is another commentary in the series Korte Verk-Kampen, 1953. pp.145. HET HOOGLIED. By Dr. G. Ch. Adders. J. H. Kok N. V., readers of the Calvin Forum who can read Dutch. as author, will be enough to commend this little book to those in the Netherlands. This fact, and the name of Dr. Aalders Kampen, and written by leading Reformed scholars O laring Der Heilige Schrift, published by Kok of sermons on the Song of Solomon. sermonizing will have to look elsewhere, e.g. in Spurgeon's to explanation. Anyone seeking applicatory material for dicated in a general way the commentary as such is limited though the expository value of the book of Canticles is inof the language Dr. Aalders takes a very sane approach. Alof exegesis. Armed with thorough scholarship and mastery lem books of Scripture, and the subject of a wide diversity lomon, or Canticles. This has always been one of the prob--o2 to gno2 sht to smen balland and is beilgooH to H and difficulties of explanation. tion indicates some of the facts about the text, translation Canon, to which the fourth section is devoted. A final sec-Church. This explains its place and significance in the icance as pointing to the relationship of Christ and the the love of Solomon and his bride, but with deeper signittypical interpretation, regarding the poem as descriptive of also in the exposition of the text. Dr. Aalders adopts the against this view are found not only in the introduction, but between a shepherd-lover and King Solomon. Arguments too the dramatic interpretation, which introduces a conflict sistent application is impossible and leads to absurdities. So terpretation held since Jewish times is rejected, because con-Hebrew love songs, but a unified whole. The allegorical ingeneral purpose of the Song. It is not a loose collection of lengthy third section treats of the unity of composition and and the rise of Samaria as capitol of the ten tribes. The language, and places it between the division of the kingdom late origin of the book argued by many on account of its evidence, especially reference to Tirza in 6.4 he rejects the written by a later poet. Secondly, on the basis of internal was not the author, but that it is a song about Solomon, first discusses name and author, and concludes that Solomon In his comparatively long introductory section Asiders standard of the Korte Verklaring series. with the new RSV. This little volume carries on the lofty word for "virgin" so much in the public eye in connection lights on Hebrew words and customs, notably that on the sion of each problem. There are several interesting sidecome dry or technical the author gives a thorough discusexactly kort (short or brief). Although he does not be-The Song a commentary of over one hundred pages is not view of the fact that there are only eight short chapters in of the contents, followed by verse by verse comments. In sense. Following the translation there is a brief synopsis 3:12, showing that the existing text makes no intelligible halders indicates his dissent. He gives no translation of the New Version of the Dutch Bible, but in a few instances tion by section. This translation agrees in the main with in his commentary. There is first of all a translation, sec-The principles stated in the introduction guide the author

Lacombe, Alberta, Canada. Егсо Н. Оозтеирокр

J. HASPER

noiteauque eemieirhV

ot noitginisdus e'resC B meht Miner Christmas Gilt than

Imurak niuled ahd

BEWEMBER HIM OR HER

A Serviceman who ,bnəirf grizing A

A Student, A Profes-Needs Good Reading,

sional Man, A Retired

Businessman Worker, Farmer or ─OU NOU DO

.smoY bnA With the Name and Address of Your Friend Send Us Two Dollars

ME SEND AON:

4diəsəA A—

For You to Sign and Christmas Gift Card -An Engraved Calvin Forum Presentation

At Christmas Time. Send to Your Friend

reaff ohld tundynautho eteel tehlo tiid eemteirho A

It is Never Too Early!

Do It Today!

Grand Rapids, Michigan Calvin College, Тне Сагиіи Ровим, 不不要不不要不多不要不多不要不多要不要你我想完成者不多是你都不会看了我看你的一个好一个好一个好一个好一个好一个我们的我们的我们会看了我们会看了我们的我们的我们的我们的看到我看到我看到我看到我看到我看到